Bishop initiates three during Mass in Moberly prison

By Jay Nies

Chaplain Tom Brack of the Moberly Correctional Center (MCC) welcomed Bishop W. Shawn McKnight to the chapel and asked about his just-completed visit to the prison’s Protective Custody Unit (PCU).

“It was interesting,” the bishop told him. “There are saints down there.”

Bishop McKnight had accompanied Deacons John Hill and Christopher Sago into the PCU, a wing where the men live separately from the rest of the prison population for safety reasons.

“The guys were asking about having the bishop come, and Deacon Hill said, ‘I don’t see why not,’” said Deacon Sago. “He asked, and the bishop said, ‘Well, yeah!’”

Anticipation started building in September, when the men got word of the pending visit.

“It’s like a birthday and Christmas all rolled into one for these guys,” said Deacon Sago. “They are super excited.”

Bishop McKnight visited with the Catholic men in PCU who signed up to talk with him. He heard their confessions and presided at a short Communion service in the same office he had used for a confessional.

“Jesus Christ continually bears to us a message of hope, a message of love and forgiveness, a message of LIFE — eternal life,” the bishop told the men.

Deacon Hill preached the homily. He said Advent is a time to make changes, “to take some type of first step to get closer to Christ, to become more like Him.”

“The Kingdom of God is at hand!” he said, echoing St. John the Baptist.

Servant of God Julia Greeley, who grew up in slavery near Hannibal before the Civil War, was known even in her lifetime as an Angel of Charity.

Her self-effacing kindness, missionary zeal and devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus emblazoned her memory onto the minds of people who encountered her in Denver, where she spent most of her adult life.

She was blind in one eye due to the harsh treatment she had received as a slave. Her body bore the ravages of excessive, menial work.

She never earned much money as a housekeeper, even back in helping people who were worse off than she was.

But as a convert to Catholic Christianity and a professed member of the Secular Order of St. Francis, she held nothing of the world. Her own money to give away, she begged for more.

When she ran out of her own money to give away, she begged for more.

She worked in darkness and secret, in deference to the dignity of the people she was helping.

Now, more than a century after her death, her earthly remains await the Resurrection after her death, her earthly residence is written recollections of people who witnessed and benefitted from her kindness and generosity, mostly as children.

Capuchin Franciscan Father Blaine Berkey included many such letters in his book, In Sacred Service of the Sacred Heart: The Life and Virtues of Julia Greeley.

One is from Theodora Arnold to Eleanor Pavella Castellan, who was researching Miss Greeley’s life 50 years ago.

The letter states, in part: “I’ll never forget our first Christmas without Mother. Julia told us she was going to ask Father if she could take Margaret and me downtown at night to see the display of lights and all the toys in the basement of the Denver Dry Goods.

“When there, she told us to pick out anything we wanted for Christmas. I remember my sister picked out a three-piece toilet set — comb, mirror and brush — while I, after hearing so much about the hard times looked at the price tag and picked a little wooden bucket and shovel, all for 10 cents and only suitable for a 2-year-old child.

“Julia said, ‘Oh, no, child, you want something better than that.’

“And then she bought me a doll’s trunk, costing a dollar and also the bucket. … She was getting $10 a month in wages.

“After that, we often saw Julia on the streets, delivering the Sacred Heart League leaflets to the firemen.”

Please pray for a miraculous sign of God’s favor on a humble woman whose charity and mercy still outshines the darkness she was subjected to while she was growing up in this state.

Father Clarence Wiederholt notes 65th priestly anniversary

Was ordained less than a year before the Jefferson City diocese was founded in 1956

By Jay Nies

One of his brothers was a parishioner there, so he got to spend his first Christmas as a priest catching up with old friends.

The new priest offered his first parish Mass at midnight on Christmas at the St. Benedict mission in Burlington Junction, after hearing his first confessions there.

Fr. Wiederholt was the youngest priest of the old St. Joseph diocese when Bishop (later Cardinal) John P. Cody ordained him, and he became the youngest priest of the Jefferson City diocese upon its creation a few months later.

Fr. Wiederholt turned to his altar and gave his first Mass there. He was so happy to be at home.

“I believe I could no longer see him because his job was done and his spirit went back to heaven.”

He is one of only two who were serving here when Venerable Pope Pius XII created the diocese in 1956.

He recently set up a little display in his apartment in Jefferson City.

Titled "Then and Now," it includes a portrait taken of him this year and another from his ordination, separated by an image of the Holy Family.

Helping parishes spread the Good News across the ‘digital continent’

By Jay Nies

As more Catholics and future Catholics turn to the Web for information and guidance, it’s essential for every parish to be right there with them, informing, enlightening, consoling, guiding, and preaching the Word at all times.

Failure is not an option.

“There’s an information revolution taking place around us,” said Ashley Wiskirchen, director of parish communications for the Jefferson City diocese. “We have no choice but to be a part of it if we’re going to be true to our mandate to share the Good News of Jesus Christ with all people.

“Fortunately, I think most people in our diocese get that,” she said.

Since coming to work for the diocese eight months ago, Mrs. Wiskirchen has been helping parishes throughout these 38 counties strengthen their online presence, using some of the most up-to-date web design and technology available.

The process melds the timeless elements of unity, beauty and truth that have been hallmarks of Catholic evangelization for 2,000 years with the cutting-edge digital marketing practices of this age.

“Parishes deserve good websites that are user-friendly and easy to navigate for Catholics and non-Catholics alike,” said Mrs. Wiskirchen. “Data from our diocese shows that many parishioners prefer to be connected digitally, by text messaging, social media and/or email.”

She said the parish website project builds on that preference by providing a digital hub that translates fruitful parish life into an invitation for parishioners and community members to “dive in.”

The updated parish websites position parishes to begin expanding their communications with parishioners and community members to electronic newsletters, Facebook groups and other social media channels.

“We’re meeting the faithful where they are online and enriching our digital experiences by bringing the Church into what Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI referred to as ‘the digital continent,’” said Mrs. Wiskirchen.

There are other benefits, most notably regarding Bishop W. Shawn McKnight’s emphasis on strengthening the Church through better collaboration.

“Our bishop’s vision of a diocese that is ‘better together’ is the driving principal behind the development and organization of this project, as we seek to design not just one well of information in a digital space, but a network of parishes that are connecting and engaging with the faithful online,” said Mrs. Wiskirchen.

While these new parish websites are owned and operated at the parish level, they also connect back to the main diocesan website.

“This connection allows us to interweave the parishes in ways that were previously impossible,” she stated. “Information can flow freely between the diocese and parish websites, keeping important topics up-to-date and creating an atmosphere of co-responsibility between both parties, to ensure the faithful have accurate and relevant content to explore.”

Her favorite feature of these new sites is the capability for the diocese to provide in-depth articles on faith topics, Church teaching and diocesan policies — which relieves the parish website administrators of some of the burden of checking the diocesan website for updates and ensuring that accurate information is coming from the diocese directly to parishioners on their website.

“While every parish is unique, they often have similar goals and similar challenges,” she noted. “From the big-ticket items like providing an interactive and current parish calendar that promotes community-building events, to the nitty-gritty — and oftentimes stress-inducing — tasks, such as collecting time and talent information online and exporting that data in a meaningful way for parish staff to engage parishioners, these websites can overcome hurdles that have, in many cases, slowed or stalled progress in advancing the mission of the Church in evangelization and service.”

Waves of energy

With support from the diocese’s Catholic Stewardship Appeal (CSA), the parish website project is being carried out in phases through tight collaboration between individual parishes and the diocese.

The first “wave” includes transforming the websites for 23 parishes and Catholic Charities of Central and Northern Missouri (CCCN-NO).

Of those, nine parishes are actively building their new websites, with two nearing the finish line.

The new site for Ss. Peter & Paul parish in Boonville is in test mode and is set to be launched before the new year.

“I am very excited for Ss. Peter & Paul parish to launch their website,” said Mrs. Wiskirchen, “because I can feel the momentum building as our parishes continue networking together to share the Gospel both online and in person as centers of charity and mercy.”

Sixteen parishes are signed up for the “second wave,” which is set to begin early spring 2020.

Step by step

People involved in building their parish’s website from the ground up say it’s challenging but rewarding work, individually and for the parish as a whole.

It starts with parishes contacting Mrs. Wiskirchen at the Chancery and appointing a parish website administrator to spearhead the project locally.

Website administrators receive in-person training; professional support services from Blackbaud, the company the diocese is working with to build the parish sites; and ongoing, helpful guidance from people in the diocesan Communications Office.

The diocese is committed to not only the completion of a new parish website, but to its long-term success and effectiveness to enrich parish life.

As director of parish communications, Mrs. Wiskirchen sees her role as a support person, building the capacity of parish communicators and providing further training, recommendations and insight from her own experience as a website developer and visual communicator.

“I enjoy telling parish staff, ‘Please, ask any question!’” she said. “I’m getting great feedback from them on how we can improve upon what we’re building as we walk together.”

Once they’ve learned how the administrators go about customizing their parish websites.

“While the parish websites come pre-loaded with a wealth of great information built-in, parishes are encouraged to really make the websites their own,” said Mrs. Wiskirchen.

She said it’s important to understand the parish’s goals online — and then provide them with the easiest path to achieve that goal, both for the staff working on the website and the parishioners who are visiting it.

She cited as an example the annual process through which parishioners commit to sharing their time and talent.

“In many parishes, paper forms are mailed to parish families, filled out and returned to the parish office,” she noted. “Parish staff members then input that data back into a digital system, and sometimes have...
Sister Laura Magowan nears 70th year as a Sister of Charity of the Incarnate Word

By Rebecca Martin

Sister Laura Magowan has spent a lifetime supporting families through ministry, the young and the old and the in-between.

As her religious congregation, the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word (CCVI), celebrates its 150th anniversary this year, Sr. Laura is nearing her 70th year as a member of the congregation.

Now serving as pastoral minister at Immaculate Conception parish in Jefferson City, Sr. Laura has come a long way from her first home in County Fermanagh, Northern Ireland.

She felt pulled toward religious life while she was in high school and joined the CCVI sisters in January 1950.

That September, she traveled to San Antonio, Texas, where the order is based, for her religious formation and training.

“It was difficult to leave home, to leave family, parents and siblings,” she said in an interview in her parish office. “It was a challenge, but I realized that religious life was my calling, and I had very supportive mentors and companions along the way in my community.”

The CCVIs were founded in 1869 in Texas, first working to establish hospitals to care for the sick.

Their mission grew to include education and social ministries, founding schools and orphanages.

“I was trained to be a teacher and served in parochial schools in Illinois, Texas and Missouri,” Sr. Laura said.

Her ministry in education spanned teaching and administrative roles, including seven years as an administrator at an adolescent residential treatment facility in Dallas.

For all ages

“The sisters came (to Immaculate Conception) in 1914 — that was the year the parish opened — and continued teaching in the parochial school until about five years ago,” she said.

Sr. Laura has served the parishioners of Immaculate Conception for 31 years now, but never as a teacher.

As director of religious education, she helped prepare young people to receive sacraments — First Holy Communion, reconciliation and confirmation — and also led adult education programs and the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA), where she prepared and welcomed new Catholics into the Church.

“I’ve had a variety of experiences with the many different people I have worked with,” she said. “I have worked with young people preparing for confirmation, I’ve worked with their parents, I’ve worked with volunteer men and women of the parish — outstanding, faith-filled people who have taught me so much and have been very supportive.

“I learned many things about life and about faith and, I think, the specialness of each person that I meet every day,” she said.

Her current role rounds out the various ways she’s worked to support families.

“I’ve always enjoyed teaching, but the role of pastoral minister has been a very special form of service for me,” she said. “It’s a joy and a blessing at this point in time to serve in ministry to the elderly of the parish, visiting them in homes, in many nursing homes and in the hospital.”

Bringing it home

Looking back on a long life and the face of Immaculate Conception for older parishioners who can’t make it to church.

“I just visit and pray, sometimes take them Holy Communion, ask them about the family. If they have a cat or a dog, I play with them because I’m an animal lover,” she said of her regular home visits.

“I let them know that their parish knows them and values them and wants to support them however they can at this time in their lives.”

During this interview, she was preparing to attend a funeral in the church next door to show her support for the family.

She’s as likely to be seen at the monthly breakfast organized for senior citizens or any other event that gives life to the parish community.

She gets as much joy from reaching out to elderly parishioners as she does seeing young families bring their children to church.

“The faith, energy and enthusiasm of our parish gives me renewed energy,” she said. “I see the older people who have been with us all along, I see a lot of potential in the young people.

“I think that the faith and knowledge that God is always with us — always has been and always will be — is the focus of my life and is visible in this faith community of Immaculate Conception,” she stated.

“The faith, caring and generosity of Immaculate Conception parish is a constant source of inspiration for me and hope for the future.”

Incarnate Word Sister Cathy Vetter celebrates golden jubilee

Jefferson City native and graduate of Immaculate Conception School

By Eddie O’Neill

In the parlance of religious life, Sister Cathy Vetter is known as a “lifer.”

That is, a sister is the only thing she has ever wanted to be for as long as she’s been alive.

She dates her calling to religious life back to more than six decades ago when she was a first-grader at Immaculate Conception School in Jefferson City.

“I fell in love with my teacher who was an Incarnate Word Sister,” Sr. Cathy said with a smile.

“I wanted to be like her, and God gave me the grace to follow through with that,” she said. “I was blessed with a family who was very supportive of my call, as I had an aunt who was a nun.”

Earlier this year, Sr. Cathy marked her golden jubilee as a Sister of Charity of the Incarnate Word (CCVI), the community in which she professed her first vows in 1969.

Her family ties to Immaculate Conception parish and the diocese here are still strong.

Members and friends of St. George parish in Linn take part in the laying of wreaths Dec. 7 at St. George Cemetery. Sponsored by Boy Scouts of America Troops 17 and 3017, and the Cub Scout Pack 17, the event included a keynote address by Chief Warrant Officer Five Patrick J. Muenks. “We of peace and love.”

Two from Latin America are studying English, while the others hail from the United States.

Sr. Cathy is the director of a second-year novice from Texas.

“I really enjoy journeying with women in their call and encouraging them to respond to God’s call for them,” she said.

She shared that in her free time, she enjoys visiting over dinner, reading, and swimming at the local YMCA.

She loves to get outdoors, especially on rivers and lakes, and tend to her garden when the season arrives.

As for the road ahead, her prayer is for peace in our world.

“My hope is that each of us would show greater respect for the dignity of every person and for our planet,” she said.

“Sadly, there is so much fear and anger in our world that we do not know how to be persons of peace and love.”

Adoption by single parent?/Masses for deceased non-Catholics?

By Father Kenneth Doyle

Catholic News Service

Q. I desperately want a child. I am not married and have had cancer twice. I take chemo for five days, then I’m off for 23 days, and the cycle is continuous. I will not be able to have my own children because chemo could harm the baby. I am not able to adopt through Catholic Charities since I am single. I am a practicing Catholic wanting to take care of an unwanted child. Why am I unable to adopt through Catholic Charities?

A. Catholic Charities has no rule against adoption by a single parent, so I’m not sure whether you were told that or just assumed it. (The Diocese of Erie, Pennsylvania, for example, specifies on its website, “Single parents are eligible to become adoptive applicants for some programs. Catholic Charities Counseling and Adoption Services understands that a good home can be provided by a single parent.”)

While a two-parent home is the ideal, single parents can indeed offer children the love and stability they need to develop and flourish. A prospective parent’s health, though, is one of the factors taken into account in the placement decision, since raising a child can be a demanding task. I would suggest that you speak directly to the Catholic Charities office in your area and explain your situation, perhaps bolstered by a doctor’s certificate of your readiness to be a parent.

Q. Is there any prohibition against having Masses said for deceased Protestants or Jews, or should they only be requested for Catholics? (Suffolk, Virginia)

A. There is no canonical rule against having a Mass said for a deceased non-Catholic. As a matter of fact, the opposite is true; the Church’s Code of Canon Law says, “A priest is free to apply the Mass for anyone, living or dead” (Canon 901).

This means that the Eucharist can be offered for anyone—dead or alive, Catholic or non-Catholic. And that brings up another question: If you attend the wake of a non-Catholic, is it OK to bring a Mass card? The answer is “Yes.”

One might think the opposite; most Protestants, for example, do not believe in the existence of purgatory; they feel that their deceased loved ones, if they lived a worthy life, are already experiencing eternal beatitude.

Since the Mass is an intercessory prayer (it re-presents the salvific acts of Christ in His death and resurrection and seeks to apply those merits to the deceased), one might suspect that Protestants would see this as unnecessary and could be offended if given a Mass card. But I have never found that to be so; instead I have found them consistently grateful.

Which brings up still a third question: Can you have a Catholic funeral Mass for a non-Catholic? Here again the answer is “Yes,” under certain circumstances. Canon 1183.3 provides that a Catholic church funeral may be offered for baptized non-Catholics “unless their intention is evidently to the contrary and provided that their own minister is not available.”

Questions may be sent to Father Kenneth Doyle at askfatherdoyle@gmail.com and 30 Columbia Circle Dr., Albany, New York 12203.

Papal Audience

December 18, 2019

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

In these last days of Advent, we do well to ask ourselves: How am I preparing for the birth of Jesus? One way to prepare for Christmas is to set up a nativity scene in our homes, churches and public spaces, a lovely tradition that began with St. Francis of Assisi. The Christmas crèche is a kind of living Gospel, a touching reminder that the Lord showed His love for us by being born as one of us, in order to share in our daily lives, hopes and concerns. The name Bethlehem, which means “house of bread,” and the image of the manger, evoke the meals which we share as families, and the centrality of Jesus, the Living Bread, come down from heaven, in our family life. In this world of frenetic activity, the Christmas crèche also encourages us to pause and contemplate what is truly important in life. Everything in the nativity scene speaks of the harmony and peace that only Christ the Savior can bring to our lives and to our world. As we gaze upon the lowly scene of Jesus’ birth, let us invite Him into our hearts, so that each new day can bring spiritual rebirth and preserve in us the joy of Christmas.

I greet the English-speaking pilgrims and visitors taking part in today’s audience, especially the groups from Canada and the United States of America. I wish all of you a very blessed Christmas, and I ask you to pray for the Church, as you are already doing, and for peace this Christmas. Thank you.

Voices from the Vineyard

By Sister Angela McKeever

I have just completed 40 years in Chile and for 25 of these I have been going to the oldest jail in Santiago called the “Peni.” It was built almost 200 years ago for 500 men. Today there are 5,000 prisoners.

Most of the inmates are addicted to drugs, alcohol, money and sex. Most have nothing to do all day except smoke drugs, make arms or “spears” to fight one another, or talk on their mobile phones.

To see men or women in jail who are over 60 or 70 years of age is sad, but all their lives they have been offenders. Sometimes you meet whole families who are involved in crime.

One woman I met was in the women’s jail at the same time as all of her seven sons were incarcerated. When her children were young, she was abandoned by an alcoholic husband.

One day I met Miguel. He told me he was there for robbery, which had a lot to do with his drug addiction. He had been living on the street as he had lost his family, work, etc., because of the drugs.

I asked him, “Would you not like to give up drugs?” “No,” he said, “I love my drugs.” I had with me the Narcotics Anon (NA) booklet, “Just for Today,” meditations for every day of the year. He said, “Let me see what it says for my birthday.”

The theme of that day was “surrender.” He handed me back the book and said, “Surrender, now!”

In spite of all his losses, even the loss of his freedom, he was not ready to blame his drugs for his misfortune, which showed how much in the grasp of addiction he was.

Jail is a cruel place, steeped in darkness. We go there to bring some hope and light from the Word of God and also to promote recovery in Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) or NA. At times, you do meet some who want to come out of the darkness and change their hearts of stone and walk in the light of God. So we keep on going, keep on hoping and keep on praying for these prisoners.

Advent and waiting

By Brett Robinson

My wife and I are expecting our fifth child in February. It’s been six years since we had a newborn in the house, and so there are some things we need to relearn about life with a baby. Most pressing perhaps is the role that technology will play in our family life when the new baby arrives.

Six years ago our kids were much younger. We had a newborn and three kids under 8. Nobody looked at phones or played on tablets. They just weren’t part of our daily routine. Now we have a teenager who uses the computer for research and has his own Kindle for reading and games. Our younger children are granted screen time after homeschooling is over so that my wife can catch her breath.

As a media studies academic, I have been very conscious of how technology is changing domestic life. My oldest son never had regular screen time and he is now an incredible pianist and artist who loves woodworking and metalsmithing.

I am a digital native in the alternative sense. He uses his digits, his fingers, to create beautiful things that give him satisfaction and pleasure. His music fills the house and his art hangs on the walls, allowing the rest of us to share in that pleasure.

Our other children have thankfully followed suit by developing various artistic and athletic interests, which are entirely analog experiences. But you can see a difference among the ones who grew up with more screen time. They are less tolerant of being bored.

As many others have pointed out, boredom is the seedbed of creativity. If you don’t allow a space for boredom, the interior life of reflection, silence and creativity has less room to grow.

This sounds counterintuitive and maybe a little cruel. As a parent, it’s hard to tell a child that their misery (their word, not mine) is good for the soul. Pascal said that the source of man’s misery is our inability to sit quietly in a room alone. In a world of constant activity and productivity, it is no small act of rebellion to try and sit quietly in a room alone.

Pope Pius XII said that society’s stress on material progress has upset the balance and harmony of man. He cautioned that someone who grows up in an atmosphere that is centered on technology will “inevitably discover that one whole part of his make-up ... is missing.”

The ability to think, judge and act in ways that are most fully human can be lost in a technological environment that favors particular ways of thinking, judging and acting that reflect the logic of the machines around us.

We are expected to do things very quickly. A text message that is not answered instantaneously is seen as a slight. A work email that is not responded to immediately is viewed as a lack of productivity. We live in an environment dictated by speed whether by our phones, our cars or our dishwashers. There is an implicit preference for that which gets things done faster.

We are a couple months away from the birth of our son. We can’t wait for him to arrive, but we know God’s careful work of creation takes time. It’s not the schedule we would pick, but that is partly due to the artificial expectations fostered by our environment.

We are so thankful this waiting coincides with Advent because it helps remind us of the patient waiting that God has ordained for all of creation. The Savior is not Siri. He does not obey our commands like our other technological genies. It is our obedience to God that brings us back into harmony with Christ in the midst of so much “progress.”

Father Thomas Cusack, pastor of St. Stephen parish in Indian Creek, visited Edina and offered the community’s first Mass in a home.

Historian Jean Gilmore in 1974 noted that when the call for construction volunteers went out in the summer of 1844, “two-thirds of the men in Adair, Lewis and Scott Counties were sufficiently motivated to answer the call, and not one man in 50 was unaware of what was going on in Edina.”

Catholics and non-Catholics spent three days bringing logs to the site and setting them in place. Ms. Gilmore wrote in The Legacy: The History of St. Joseph Catholic Church, Edina, Mo., “and with more optimism than foresight built a church that was quite large for the number of Catholics in the area.”

Money ran out before windows and interior furnishings could be installed. Mr. Early insisted on heading back to Missouri to Edina after Fr. Byrne retired.

The log church was being completed, Father Denis Fitzgerald, pastor of St. Patrick parish in Clark County, began traveling to Edina regularly to offer Mass.

Archbishop Peter Richard Kenrick of St. Louis appointed him to be the Edina parish’s first resident pastor in 1852.

More immigrants from Ireland, mostly refugees from the potato famine, began settling in the area, and the parish quickly outgrew the log church.

The archbishop sent a much younger priest, Father John Powers, to Edina after Fr. Byrne retired.

The 28-year-old oversaw the building of a second, larger church but eventually succumbed to the rigors of frontier life and died.

The next pastor, Father Bernard McMenomy, led the parish through the turmoil of the Civil War but moved to Iowa after passage of the state’s 1865 Constitution.

That document included a requirement that all professionals, including teachers and ministers, take an “Ironclad Oath” of allegiance to the Union before publicly engaging in their work.

Archbishop Kenrick, insisting that the privilege and obligation of handing on the Catholic faith comes from God alone, instructed his priests not to take the oath.

Many priests and ministers were arrested and fined before the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the oath requirement.

Fr. McMenomy was indicted for officiating at a marriage but left the state before he could be arrested.

His successor, Father David Phelan, was also indicted for preaching without taking the oath.

He bought an Edina newspaper and turned it into a regional Catholic paper called the Missouri Watchman, raging against such indignities as the Ironclad Oath.

Near the end of this pastorate, he invited a group of Sisters of Loreto of Nerinx, Kentucky, to open a Catholic academy for girls.

Three of the sisters on the faculty had been indicted for teaching without taking the oath.

A group of De LaSalle Christian Brothers later opened up a school for boys.

Both would eventually be combined into a coed institution known as St. Joseph School.

Sisters of Loreto remained on the faculty until 1973.

Their convent later served as a regional catechetical center. The parish in 2004 converted it into a state-of-the-art retreat center, which remains in use.

“Cathedral of the North”

The second church was already snug when Father John Fitzgerald arrived as pastor in 1868.

Before considering a larger building, he convinced a gifted writer in the parish to send letters to East Coast newspapers, inviting immigrants to take advantage of the economic opportunities and strong Catholic community in Knox County, Missouri.

The letters helped swell the population even more, justifying construction of the massive church that now stands at North Main and East Smallwood streets.

Fr. Fitzgerald enlisted a master builder, Louis Weishar, to design the new church and oversee its construction.

Parishioners raised the money, extracted the stone and clay from the ground, fired the bricks and harvested the lumber locally.

Auxiliary Bishop Patrick J. Ryan of St. Louis — future archbishop of Philadelphia — blessed the cornerstone and set it into place in 1873.

Archbishop Kenrick dedicated the church in 1875.

The organ is believed to have been built for the 1876 Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia. Shipped to Missouri by railroad in 1885, it was reported to be the largest instru-

Pope blesses Nativity scene statues — signs of God’s love

Vatican City

Pope Francis blessed hundreds of figurines of the baby Jesus — ranging from tiny plastic figures to life-sized statues — and encouraged children to make sure they have Nativity scenes at home. After reciting the Angelus prayer Dec. 15, the third Sunday of Advent, Pope Francis did the traditional blessing of the “bambinelli,” or statues of the infant Jesus, for children to put in mangers at home, at school and in their parishes.

“Raise the statues up,” the Pope told the children. “I bless them from my heart.”

Pope Francis then quoted from his new apostolic letter on the meaning and importance of the creche: “The Nativity scene is like a living Gospel. ... As we contemplate the Christmas story, we are invited to set out on a spiritual journey, drawn by the humility of the God Who became Man to encounter every man and woman. We come to realize that so great is His love for us that He became one of us, so that we in turn might become one with Him.”

In his main Angelus address, Pope Francis spoke about the importance of answering the Advent call to conversion in preparation for Christmas.

“We are called to recognize the face God chose to assume in Jesus Christ, humble and merciful,” he said.

“Advent is a time of grace,” the Pope said. “It tells us it’s not enough to believe in God; it’s necessary to purify our faith each day.”

The Advent journey is about preparing “to welcome not a character from a fable, but the God Who calls us, gets us involved and Who makes us choose,” he said. “The Baby lying in the manger has the face of our neediest brothers and sisters, who deserve the care of the Christian community. Nativity scenes were also on the Pope’s mind Dec. 16 when he met members of Italy’s Catholic Action section for 11- to 13-year-olds for his annual exchange of Christmas greetings with them.

“I’m giving you some homework,” he told them. “On Christmas Day pause in prayer and, with the same awe of the shepherds, look upon baby Jesus who came into the world to bring the love of God, Who makes all things new.

“With His birth, Jesus became a bridge between God and humanity, reconciling earth and heaven, restoring the unity of the whole human race,” the Pope said. “And today He asks you, too, to be little bridges where you live. You know there always is a need to build bridges, right?”

Seasonal reminders

Father Gregory Meystrik displays his collection of Nativity scenes from around the world at Trips and More Travel Agency, during the Lichternacht “Light the Night” on Dec. 6 in downtown Rolla. Fr. Meystrik, pastor of St. Patrick parish in Rolla, Immaculate Conception parish in St. James and St. Anthony parish in Rosati, has been collecting Nativity scenes for over 25 years.

(Matthew 3:2). “Regardless of our situation, the Kingdom of God is here and now,” Deacon Hill continued. “As followers and disciples of Jesus Christ, we try as hard as we can, with the help and the grace of God, to imitate His Son, to show love, to show forgiveness, to show compassion.”

Bishop McKnight gave them Holy Communion and called down a blessing from God.

One of the men said he felt the Holy Spirit reach into his heart, filling him with joy and peace.

The man prayed for his family back home to have the same experience whenever they receive the sacraments.

He said he looks forward to worshipping God with them together some day.

“I believe”

At Mass in the chapel, Bishop McKnight was to welcome three of the residents into full communion with the Church — receiving their Profession of Faith, confirming them and giving them their First Holy Communion.

He first heard more residents’ confessions in a room off to the side of the chapel while about 60 people — prison residents and volunteers from St. Pius X parish who regularly visit them — prepared for Mass.

“What the bishop is going to give you, what God is going to consecrate is truly the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ,” Deacon Hill reminded everyone present. “It’s not a symbol, it is not a sign, it is truly the Body and Blood of Christ.”

“The amen you say back to the bishop means, ‘I believe!’ I believe this is Jesus Christ, I believe He died for our sins, and I will try to live as a disciple of Jesus Christ!” the deacon told them.

“Is this a good place to be?”

By name, the bishop summoned the candidates for confirmation to stand before him and the altar. Together, they prayed the Nicene Creed with the rest of the congregation.

Each of the three then individually made a profession of faith: “I believe and profess all that the Holy Catholic Church believes, teaches, and proclaims to be revealed by God.”

In unity with the whole Church, the bishop then invoked God to seal them with the Holy Spirit.

He anointed them with Sacred Chrism, saying: “Be sealed with the Gift of the Holy Spirit. Amen. Peace be with you.”

He then invited everyone forward to exchange a sign of peace with the newest Catholics.

Sent forth

Right before the end of Mass, Deacon Hill called forward an MCC resident who was going home that week, as most of them eventually will.

The man’s fellow Catholics gathered around him, placing a hand on his shoulder as Deacon Hill led them in prayer: “We ask You to bless him, his family and all that he does in Your name.”

Bishop McKnight said he is proud and grateful for all that the deacons and laypeople of St. Pius X parish do to help the men in the prison maintain their connection with Christ and His Church.

He said hearing confessions, offering Mass and welcoming new members into such a tightly-knit community, made him feel like a parish priest again.

“It’s very good for my own heart to be here,” he said.

Holy ground

Moberly parishioners Joe and Mary Knaebel said the MCC chapel is an oasis of peace and holiness for men of many faith traditions.

Mrs. Knaebel encourages the men to spend as much time in the chapel as they can.

“This is a good place to be, away from all the nonsense and negative activity they encounter on the yard,” she said. “They have a wonderful chaplain and Not today!

The decades have made St. Joseph parish a smaller, tighter community than it was in the late 1800s.

The people still take seriously the preservation of their soaring church building, which can be seen from anywhere in town and from miles away.

A massive, four-year restoration project was almost finished when a fire broke out in an area above the sacristy on Aug. 15, 2013, the Solemnity of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

An extra layer of sheetrock applied during the renovation helped contain the fire.

Adorning the wall between the sacristy and the sanctuary is an image of the Blessed Mother.

"It was her feastday, and she was like, 'Nope. You're not getting past me. Not today,'" said neighbor and lifelong parishioner Dot Kriegshauser.

The nearby Knights of Columbus Hall served as a temporary church while parishioners worked with insurance adjusters, diocesan advisors and contractors to erase the damage.

Wise investor

Bishop McKnight pointed out at the jubilee Mass that the people of St. Joseph parish are a temple of the Lord.

"This magnificent edifice is the sacramental representation of the presence of God and His Church, the people, in this community," the bishop asserted, "St. Paul challenges us to build upon the foundation of our ancestors in the faith— and the courage it took that Fr. Tolton's 1889 visit buttressed him and his wife, Marianne, with prayer.

He believes the way the people came together and worked to restore the church after the fire "speaks volumes to the type of people we have in our parish."

It testifies to a solid foundation of faith and commitment "which has been passed down from generation to generation, which is the way it should be," he said.

Hardworking and dependable

Cheryl Hayes, who grew up in nearby Baring and joined St. Joseph parish over 50 years ago, said she loves the camaraderie among the people.

"God is right at the forefront of every bit of it," she said, "in the good, even in the bad."

Mr. Clark oversaw the 2010 renovation of the church and the 2013-15 restoration after the fire.

He described his fellow parishioners as "good, hard-working, dependable salt-of-the-earth people."

He said their faith is evident in how they worship God and look out for each other.

He believes that God worked with firefighters to contain the fire and prevent it from engulfing the entire church.

"There literally were no lathe or studs or anything wooden left behind that wall," he noted. "In a significant area, the only thing left was plaster, and if it had broken through that, we would have lost it all."

Head of household

"I've known people here who would make good saints," said Anne Gramling who taught at the old St. Joseph School for almost 20 years.

"God is right at the center of all of this," she said. "I know He is."

After the jubilee Mass and reception, a group of parishioners and friends gathered in the Parish Education Building for fellowship and memories. They watched a slideshow of wedding, school, Christmases, historical and other photos.

Parishioner Betty Jo Gonsner noted that her granddaughter is the seventh generation in her family to call St. Joseph parish home.

She believes 175 years is a milestone well worth celebrating.

"I think that together, we've influenced a lot of people in all that time, hopefully by our faithfulness, our example," she said.

Universal Church

Father Paul Clark, associate pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes parish in Columbia and part-time chaplain at Fr. Tolton Regional Catholic High School in Columbia, grew up in Edina and went to St. Joseph School before it closed.

His parents, Jim and Kyle Clark, were always active in the parish — his mother particularly in adult ministry and outreach to the elderly and homebound, his father as director of the choir.

"I think that was a huge influence on me — the whole idea of service, of giving your talents back to the Church and back to the God Who gave you the gifts in the first place," said Fr. Clark.

He believes the 175th anniversary is a celebration for the whole diocese, because all parishes are part of one local Church.

"It's good for everyone, especially young people, to see that there are communities in our diocese that have been thriving since long, long before we were born," he said.

He said it's not just a matter of geology, geography or parish affiliation.

"The word 'universal' keeps coming to me," he said, "and it's not just our Church across the world. It's a Church that exists throughout time, and we are all connected historically back to Christ's Apostles."

"What we celebrate will continue when we're in heaven," he asserted, "when we're all finished and united."

Nativity in the State Capitol

By Jay Nies

Carols and hymns and the light of the Word Made Flesh radiated for two hours in the Missouri State Capitol during this year’s Nativity at the Capitol event, held on Dec. 12 in the Capitol Rotunda.

The Columbia 40 Days for Life cosponsored the event, which included the prominent display of a large-scale Nativity scene.

“It was an afternoon celebrating the real ‘reason for the Season,’” stated Kathy Forck, coordinator for Columbia 40 Days for Life.

It included prayer and Scripture reading by Missouri residents, and vocal and instrumental music performed by students from eight local schools, including: Blair Oaks and St. Stanislaus schools in Wardville; Our Lady of the Snows School in Mary’s Home; St. Francis Xavier School in Taos; Immaculate Conception School, St. Peter Interparish School, St. Joseph Cathedral School, and Helias Catholic High Schools, all in Jefferson City.

Pianist Annie Skelton, flutist Ada Skelton and vocalist Eva Jones provided additional music.

Rev. Greg White, former Cole County sheriff, served as moderator and master of ceremonies.

Judy Bax of the Missouri Nativity Scene Committee organized the event and provided the Nativity scene for the display.

Since the display is privately funded and sponsored without any government aid or endorsement, it is fully protected under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

“We are very pleased to be exercising our First Amendment rights by expressing our religious faith in public,” said Mrs. Bax. “It is an honor to celebrate Christmas with a nativity scene in the Missouri State Capitol.”

year labored on, I surrendered. I discarded my faltering agnosticism and, in some kind of act of faith whose words I no longer remember, I accepted Jesus.

I’m much older now. I’m not sure how well I’ve gotten to know this Jesus. I have friends who talk about casual conversations with Him, but I often find myself sitting like a shy student in His classroom. Or like the character in Flannery O’Connor’s Wise Blood, seeing Jesus dart from tree to tree, “a wild ragged figure” in the back of my mind.

Nevertheless, despite me He’s been faithful. Meister Eckhart, the medieval mystic, said, “We are all meant to be mothers of God ... for God is always needing to be born.” May God be born in and from each of us this Advent.

in the Residents Encounter Christ (REC)

they’ve seen the number of people attending the monthly REC fel-

Those are people whose lives began to change when they encountered Christ
personally on a three-day REC retreat, held regularly in prisons throughout Missouri.

Each of those weekends requires about 20 to 25 outside volunteers.

“Some of the men here have never

Mr. Knaebel. “But on this retreat, they feel the love, the sharing of faith so far. I am most grateful and full of joy and excitement to have been realized a lot of my faith emanating from him. It was a

Deacon Hill said it was a phenom-

“We think they’ve had a spiritual expe-

Was the bishop right about there be-

“Most definitely!” said Deacon Hill.

An angel speaks to Joseph in a dream

By Jennifer Ficcaglia
Catholic News Service

Joseph was a carpenter who lived in Nazareth. He was a very devout and righteous man who always obeyed God’s laws. Although Joseph was not wealthy, he did come from a very important and well-known family. One of his ancestors was King David, the shepherd boy whom God chose to become the ruler of the Israelites during Old Testament times.

Joseph was betrothed to a virgin named Mary. “Betrothed” means that Joseph and Mary were married, but they were not yet living together as husband and wife in the same house.

One day, Joseph learned that Mary was going to have a baby. Joseph decided that, according to the law, he should not remain married to her. Since he was such a good man, Joseph did not want to bring any shame or harm to Mary, so he decided he would not make a big fuss about divorcing her.

What Joseph did not realize was that Mary had been visited by the angel Gabriel, who told her that the Holy Spirit would come upon her.

“You will conceive in your womb and bear a Son, and you shall name Him Jesus,” Gabriel told Mary. “He will be great and will be called Son of the Most High, and the Lord God will give Him the throne of David his father, and He will rule over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there will be no end.”

Not long after he had decided to divorce Mary, Joseph had a dream. An angel of God spoke to him.

“Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary your wife into your home,” the angel said. “For it is through the Holy Spirit that this Child has been conceived in her. She will bear a Son and you are to name Him Jesus, because He will save His people from their sins.”

What the angel said to Joseph fulfilled an Old Testament prophecy that God had revealed to His people through one of His prophets: “Behold, the virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and they shall name Him Emmanuel.” Emmanuel means “God is with us.”

When Joseph woke up, he did exactly as the angel had told him to do. Instead of divorcing Mary, he took her into his home and waited for Jesus to be born.

Bible Accent

There were several times when God used dreams to speak to Joseph, the earthly father of Jesus. Three of those dreams were meant to help protect the newborn Messiah from harm.

Just before Jesus was born, Joseph took Mary to his family’s home city, Bethlehem, the city of David, to be counted in a census. Mary gave birth to Jesus there, and the new parents were visited by Magi who had followed a star to where Jesus had been born.

Not long after the Magi left, Joseph had a dream. An angel warned him that King Herod wanted to kill Jesus and told him to flee to Egypt with Mary and the Baby. After the Holy Family left for Egypt in the night, Herod ordered all male children up to 2 years old who lived in or around Bethlehem to be killed.

After Herod died, Joseph had another dream in which an angel said, “Rise, take the Child and His mother and go to the land of Israel, for those who sought the Child’s life are dead.”

Joseph did so. But in another dream, he was warned not to return to Judea, because it might not be safe. Instead, Joseph brought his family to Galilee to live in Nazareth.

“A Hidden Life” illuminates martyred Catholic in Nazi Germany

Reviewed by John Mulderig Catholic News Service

In 2007, Franz Jagerstatter (1907-1943), a devoutly Catholic Austrian farmer martyred by the Nazis for his stance as a conscientious objector, was declared blessed.

In the luminous, though deliberately paced, drama “A Hidden Life” (Fox Searchlight), writer-director Terrence Malick paints a striking and memorable portrait of Jagerstatter, one that will be especially prized by believing viewers.

Malick focuses on the happy home life of his gentle protagonist, played by August Diehl, sacrificed in order to be obedient to his conscience. Motivated by his faith, Jagerstatter was determined not to take the oath of loyalty to Adolf Hitler that was demanded of all those drafted into the Wehrmacht during World War II. Refusal of the oath would ultimately mean execution.

Along with his much-loved young daughters, Jagerstatter also would be leaving behind his wife, Franziska, known as Fani (Valerie Pachner), with whom he shared a deep spiritual bond and whose influence he first became acquainted after their meeting, that he has a duty to the Fatherland and is later so anxious to save his parishioner’s life that he advises him to take the oath without meaning it. In a sign of the times, the real Franz apparently speculated, after their meeting, that Bishop Fliesser might have feared that he was a Gestapo spy out to trick the prelate into saying something dangerous.

So, as they wait for the possible news that Franz has been conscripted, she too has to struggle with the radical consequences of the commitment she inspired.

Primarily set amid the splendors of the Austrian countryside, surroundings of which cinematographer Joerg Widmer makes the most, “A Hidden Life” is beautiful both to look at and to contemplate. Yet the movie requires patience since it largely consists of scenes of ordinary domestic activities and farming chores, many of them overshadowed by the dread of what, at first, may lie ahead and later certainly does.

Still, by a process of accretion, Malick succeeds in building a sturdy bridge of sympathy between the audience and the central duo as they live out their doomed existence together — an idyll interspersed with drudgery. Thus by the time of Franz’s death, which Malick depicts with both deftness and sensitivity, attentive moviegoers will feel the weight of his loss to the full.

Malick — whose interest in Christianity, broadly considered, is well-known — celebrates Jagerstatter’s quiet heroism unreservedly. But his portrayal of the parish priest and bishop the future martyr consulted about his defiance of the regime is ambivalent at best.

Bishop Fliesser of Linz (Michael Nyqvist) is noncommittal, and, although Father Furthauer (Tobias Moretti), the pastor of their hometown of St. Radeburg, accompanies Fani on her last visit to Franz, he first counsels the latter that he has a duty to the Fatherland and is later so anxious to save his parishioner’s life that he advises him to take the oath without meaning it.

In a sign of the times, the real Franz apparently speculated, after their meeting, that Bishop Fliesser might have feared that he was a Gestapo spy out to trick the prelate into saying something dangerous.

It is satisfying to record that Fani lived long enough to attend her husband’s beatification, an experience perhaps unique in the long annals of the Church. “A Hidden Life,” which draws on the 2009 book Franz Jagerstatter: Letters and Writings From Prison, edited by Erna Putz, ends with her yearning to be reunited with Franz, an eventuality that it is not preordained but most distressing.

“The Two Popes” is flawed but enjoyable

Glossy but highly speculative account of a visit to the Vatican by Cardinal Jorge Bergoglio (Jonathan Pryce), the future Pope Francis, shortly before the resignation of his predecessor, Benedict XVI (Anthony Hopkins).

Screenwriter Anthony McCarten and director Fernando Meirelles ill-advisedly try to extol Francis by trashig Benedict, presenting the latter as doddering and detached from the realities of modern life.

They counterbalance this somewhat with an extended sequence of flashbacks showing Jesus Father Bergoglio’s quasi-collaborationist approach to the brutal military regime that came to power in Argentina following a 1976 coup d’etat, a subject about which they seem to imagine that they have acquired a clarity and certainty that has evaded many others.

But when it comes to the two pontificates, their bias is more than apparent.

Fine performances by the leads and high production values do not compensate adequately for a fast and loose version of recent Church history.

limited 'next steps' to getting that data processed in a meaningful way.”

The new parish websites include a built-in feature allowing visitors to fill out information digitally, and store that information so it can be exported into a useful format for the parish.

“So ‘Time & Talent’ information can be downloaded in a spreadsheet and shared automatically with the relevant offices or volunteers that can reach out to parishioners to help them dive into the ministry, organization or volunteer role they’re signing up for on the form,” said Mrs. Wiskirchen.

She called that kind of digitally facilitated collaboration "the sweet spot between being ‘user friendly’ and ‘usable.’

“This could be a game-changer for some parishes who often feel a tension between what they would like to accomplish in their parish and the limitations of some of the technology available to them currently," she said.

Ongoing support

After parishes complete their content development and implement it on their website, the site is reviewed and any necessary revisions and additions are made.

Multiple users can then be trained on the website's capabilities and functions, allowing parish staff to collaborate appropriately with ease.

Mrs. Wiskirchen has received steady feedback from parish website administrators at every stage of the process.

"Just like any new project, a certain learning curve comes with using a new software or technology," she said. "but many of them are making great headway on learning how to use the user-friendly builder to publish their content and are finding the process useful and relatively easy.”

Darlene Kraus, as the administrator for Ss. Peter & Paul parish in Boonville, did the work of creating and migrating all of the parish's digital content into the newly designed template for parish websites.

"The training videos provided by Blackbaud were very helpful, and I appreciate the help and support Ashley gave our parish," said Mrs. Kraus. "She took the time to look through all of our content and make recommendations that helped us organize information so that visitors to the site can find things easily.”

Mrs. Kraus appreciated Mrs. Wiskirchen’s support and feedback.

"It’s great to have a professional’s input on this but still have the ability to make this our own parish website," said Mrs. Kraus.

Beautiful expression

Mrs. Kraus, who was raised Christian but did not become Catholic until 35 years ago, said the pre-loaded content for the parish websites is helpful both to Catholics looking for a refresher on what they’ve already been taught and non-Catholics who want to learn more about the faith.

Helen Osman, director of diocesan communications, noted that the new websites contain a wealth of information for Catholics and non-Catholics alike.

"Having a process built on best practices and a template filled with standard content for our parishes allows our website visitors to experience the diversity and unity of the Catholic Church," said Mrs. Osman.

The new websites "provide a visually beautiful presentation of the faith, as Bishop Robert Barron so Often urges parishes to do, while providing a full expression of the Church’s teachings,” she said.
