Woodlayne 'on notice' over flood issues

Borough has to replace electric meters for third time, will not do it for free

By Dan Miller

danmiller@pressandjournal.com

As was the case with some other nearby residents, the flooding from 4.7 inches of rain on July 23 was worse for the Woodlayne Court apartment complex in Middletown than from Tropical Storm Lee in 2011.

The record rainfall of July 23 caused street flooding that poured an estimated 5 feet of water into the basement of Woodlayne Court at Wood and Wilson streets.

The equipment that provides July 27 after repairs had been electricity for the 49-unit complex completed to the electrical system is housed in the basement, so it was necessary to shut off the power and to evacuate Woodlayne Court's 150 residents.

Four days later — Thursday, July 27 — the power was restored and the complex manager was telling residents they could move back in, said Jean Heffelfinger, who lives in an apartment on the fourth floor of Woodlayne Court.

Borough Public Works Director Greg Wilsbach confirmed that residents could move back in on in the basement, including drying out electric panels and replacing breakers.

The borough also had to replace the electric meters, Wilsbach said. Calls seeking comment from Penrose Management Company, which manages Woodlayne Court, were not returned.

Heffelfinger has lived in Woodlayne Court since August 2003. She remembers being here during Tropical Storm Lee in 2011. But the water in the basement wasn't as high then as it was on July 23, she said.

Woodlayne Court also was not evacuated in 2011. Heffelfinger said her sister moved in with her in Woodlayne Court briefly in September 2011, after her sister had been flooded out of her residence.

This time the situation was reversed—Heffelfinger was flooded out and had to move in with her sister for a few days.

While flooding from Lee in 2011 was much worse over the area in general, Wilsbach agrees that it

Scaled-back National Night Out well-attended

By David Barr davidbarr@pressandjournal.com

Middletown's National Night Out on Aug. 1 was attended by hundreds of residents, who came out to meet and introduce themselves to their local first responders, learn about different aspects of what police and firefighters do, and come together as a unified community.

Activities included exploring the inside and roof of a firetruck, fingerprinting demonstrations, fire evacuation drills, a DUI-relat- of the event was to forge a better ed obstacle course, and meetings with local and state first responders. That was all in addition to the bounce houses, dunk tank, horseback ride, food and the playground at Hoffer Park.

Middletown Police Officer Adam Tankersley, who was in charge of coordinating the event for the first time this year, called the event a "complete success."

Tankersley put his mark on the event, as it was smaller in years' past, but more intimate, as the goal relationship with the community and remind residents that first responders are human. Tankersley said he was pleased with the turnout, the help, and event itself as people milled around with police officers and firefighters during the evening.

"It's bigger than I thought. Everyone came together. We're all fighting the same cause. We are all a family," Tankersley said.

Gal, Howes picked for Press & Journal editorial board

The Press & Journal has picked editorial board two Middletown residents to serve on its new editorial board.

Susannah Gal and Jay Howes will be the public members of the board, joining Press & Journal President Louise Sukle, Publisher Joseph G. Sukle Jr. and Editor Jason Maddux.

The board will meet on a regular basis to formulate the Editorial Views that appear on the Viewpoints page. The editorials are the consensus opinion of the editorial board. The addition of Gal and Howes expands the input to include a broader viewpoint of residents.

"This took awhile to get off the ground, but we are excited to get the board going as part of the overall redesign and revamping of the paper that took place in the spring," Maddux said. "Editorials are a very important part of each edition. Having members of the who aren't on the staff gives us a broader perspective on the issues.'

Howes has lived in Middletown for 10 years this October and has been a subscriber since he moved here. He has been in agriculture his entire life, first on the production side, then moving on to ag business and ultimately ag public policy.

"My roots as a dairy farm boy in Bucks County shaped a lot of my life," he said. He worked for 20 years with the state, 16 as director of policy development for the Agriculture and Rural Affairs Committee of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and the last four as a deputy secretary for consumer proricultural businesses. He has a bachelor's degree in agricultural economics from Cornell University.

He sees development along Route 230 as a major factor right

"A lot of it goes back to the relationship with Penn State and the ancillary train station and the other positive things that all fit in that positive economic box," he said.

Galis associate dean of research and outreach and a professor of biology at Penn State Harrisburg. She has lived around the world and made Middletown her home in July 2015. She has been writing a column for the Press & Journal since last November.

Prior to moving to Middletown, she was employed at Binghamton University in New York for more than 20 years, as a professor of biological sciences. She has a doctorate of philosophy from Johns Hopkins University and bachelor's degree in chemistry/ biochemistry from Smith College.

Gal said she is interested in the development of downtown as well as the area where the new Amtrak station will be built, and growth around Harrisburg International Airport.

"I want to see how the train station will affect the (Westporte Centre) plaza and that whole area, and how we can envision it as a concept rather than a piece here and a piece there," she said.

Mouchette is police chief, sergeants selected

By Dan Miller

danmiller@pressandjournal.com

George Mouchette has already brought changes to Middletown Police Department since being appointed interim chief in January — more focus on community policing and a new bicycle patrol, to name

Now that Mouchette has some job security — having been appointed permanent chief by borough council on Monday, Aug. 7 — the retired New York City police detective can start planning in earnest for what's to come. "I expect there will be a lot of changes over the next year and I am looking forward to that," Mouchette told the Press & Journal the morning after council voted 6-1 to make Mouchette the town's new permanent chief at a salary of $96,000 a year.

Mouchette will not receive health insurance or other benefits through the borough, Council President Damon Suglia said. "It's just straight salary."

Mouchette

The borough has been paying Mouchette $60,000 a year with no benefits and no 401(k) since Mouchette was appointed as interim chief by Mayor James H. Curry III to replace the last permanent chief, John Bey, who resigned in late December.

Councilor Diana McGlone cast the lone vote against hiring Mouchette, saying that she objected to the salary that Mouchette would be paid, not to Mouchette himself.

Interim Lower Swatara manager has plenty of government experience

By David Barr

davidbarr@pressandjournal.com

Lower Swatara Township has a new interim manager, and he is someone very knowledgeable in the workings of local government.

The board of commissioners unanimously approved Frank Lynch to the role of interim township manager at its workshop meeting Wednesday, Aug. 2. Lynch, 60, has been a member of the Susquehanna Township Board of Commissioners since 2002 and now serves as its president.

He will hold the Lower Swatara position on a month-to-month basis, at a salary of $6,000 a month. He officially begins Monday, Aug. 7.

"I've always been around local government. I live and breathe it," Lynch said.

The township is looking to replace Frank Williamson Jr., whose last day as manager was Friday, July 28. He announced that he was leaving the position after three months on the job to spend more time with his family.

He had been the township's public safety director since August 29, 2016. He was also the assistant township manger while

The upside of rain: beautiful sunflowers

Howdy, folks! I hope you are enjoying summer and all the great things about it.

The flowers, gardens and lawns still appear lush and beautiful. I know some people are tired of all the mowing to keep things looking neat. I remember some summers when we had to let the lawns brown out and go dormant. This does not appear to be the case this year. After all the rain, we could be singing, "Rain, rain, go away!"

I noticed the beautiful sunflower plants along Oberlin Road (aka 441) and I had to stop by and take a picture. They can be found between Swatara Drive and Longview Drive, near the preschool which used to be Kitchen Kastle. The farmer has planted corn for years, but is this the first time for the sunflowers? Just beautiful!

Do you have a story to share, news to tell? Please email me! Have a wonderful week!

Helpful tip

I noticed there were a few poison ivy plants on our property this week. I decided to explore a natural way to eradicate them. This is what I found: vinegar (heated), salt, a few drops of dish soap. I took a cup of vinegar and heated it in the microwave for one minute. I added about two tablespoons of salt. Next I added a few drops of dish soap and stirred. Pour this directly over the leaves and stem of your desired poison and watch it (over a few days) dry up and die!

Gifts that pamper and rejuvenate

Stress can be bad for the body, contributing to depression, anxiety, hypertension, and even obesity. Unfortunately, more than half of working adults and 47 percent of all Americans say they are concerned with the amount of stress in their lives, according to a survey from the American Psychological Association. Canadians, too, are feeling stressed. The North American research company Ipsos found that stress affects 76 percent of the Canadian population.

Reducing stress can be especially important during the holiday season, which, thanks in part to its hectic nature, tends to produce extra feelings of stress. Gifts that pamper, relax and rejuvenate might be the ideal fit for those who need a little rest and relaxation.

Aromatherapy: Studies have shown that aromatherapy, or breathing in certain scents, can trigger reactions in the brain and affect emotions, mood and memory. Specific essential oils can help relieve stress, induce relaxation and even promote better sleep. Scents such as lavender, lemon or yuzu, bergamot, ylang ylang, and jasmine can promote relaxation in Candles: The combination of subtle, low flickering light and relaxing aromas can make candles soothing gifts. Put together an entire gift package with decorative candle holders or a nice tray on which candles of various heights can be placed. Plush robe: Sometimes lounging around the house

 $is all that {\it `s}\, necessary\, to\, create\, a\, soothing\, atmosphere.$ A plush robe that is luxurious and comfortable will help that someone special unwind after a long day or after sleeping in on the weekend. Homeaguarium: Stress can melt away watching underwater life flick and flitter through the aquarium. Combined with soothing bubbles and the gentle hum and splash of the filter, it is easy to see how having a fish tank in the home can alleviate stress. Make sure the gift recipient is able to care for the fish and select low-maintenance species. Bed linens: Treat someone special to the gift of added relaxation in the bedroom. Buying bed linens is often a chore and an expense that people put off. Pima cotton, silk, satin, or sateen sheets can be cool, comfortable and soothing. Facial treatment: A massage session can be relaxing, but so can a facial. There's something serene about having a professional apply products and rub areas of the face and temples. Stress will slip away in an instant.

Pampering gifts can help ease anxiety, tame stress and help anyone feel more relaxed and happy.

HEALTH WATCH

Exploring the three main types of skin cancers

Skin cancer is a significant threat that does not discriminate based on age, gender or ethnicity. According to the Skin Cancer Foundation, each year there are more new cases of skin cancer than the combined incidence of cancers of the breast, prostate, lung and colon.

While the incidence rates of skin cancer are alarming, the good news is that skin cancer is highly curable if detected early and treated properly. Adults concerned about the threat posed by skin cancer can take a proactive approach by learning about the three main types of this often preventable disease.

Basal cell carcinoma

The American Cancer Society notes that roughly eight out of 10 skin cancers are basal cell carcinomas. Basal cells are in the lower part of the epidermis, or skin, which is known as the basal cell laver. Basal cell carcinomas typically develop on the head and neck or other areas of the body that are exposed to the sun. Though they rarely metastasize, basal cell carcinomas can spread to other areas of the body if left untreated.

The SCF notes that basal cell carcinomas may look like open sores, red patches, pink growths, shiny bumps, or scars. Basal cell carcinomas can be a byproduct of or even intense, occasional sun exposure.

Squamous cell carcinoma

Squamous cell carcinomas most commonly appear on areas of the body that are exposed to the sun, though the SCF notes they also may occur on the mucous membranes and genitals. According to the SCF, in the United States alone, more than one million people each year are diagnosed with squamous cell carcinoma, which is mainly caused by cumulative sun exposure over the course of a lifetime. Year-round exposure to ultraviolet light and UV rays from the sun, as well as UV exposure from tanning beds, can take a toll on the skin's squamous cells over time, ultimately leading to squamous cell carcinoma.

Squamous cell carcinomas may look like scaly red patches, open sores, warts, or elevated growths with a central depression. In addition, squamous cell carcinomas may crust or bleed.

Melanoma

Though they are far less common than basal and squamous cell cancers, melanomas are more likely to grow and metastasize if left untreated. Melanomas develop when unrepaired DNA damage to skin calls triggers mutations that cause the skin cells to multiply cumulative exposure to the sun rapidly and form malignant tumors. Ultraviolet radiation from sunshine or tanning beds is most often the cause of the damage connected to melanomas.

Melanomas typically resemble moles, and some may even develop from moles. Melanomas are often black or brown, but the SCF notes that they also may be pink, red, purple, blue, white, or even skin-colored. Early detection of melanoma before it spreads to other parts of the body is essential, as the SCF notes that melanoma is hard to treat and potentially fatal once it has begun to spread.

MIDDLETOWN POLICE ROUNDUP

West Shore man charged in violent home invasion charged a Mechanicsburg man with the home invasion of an apartment in the first block of South Union Street on July 29.

According to police, the victim returned home after working at a nearby restaurant to find the suspect, Timothy Aaron Schell, 39, of the first block of West Simpson Street, standing in the living room of the resident's apartment.

Schell

The victim told police he had unlocked the door of his apartment but that he did not lock the door behind him.

Police said Schell pushed the resident onto a sofa, held a knife to the victim's throat, and demanded money. Schell took $380 from the victim's left front pocket, and demanded more money.

Schell then took the victim's cellphone and the keys to his apartment and apartment building and fled, police said.

Police were led to Schell by another resident of the apartment building who had seen Schell acting suspiciously and looking in cars in the parking lot. The resident described for police the vehicle Schell got into, and the license plate number.

Schell was arraigned before Night Court Judge Steven M. Semic on Aug. 2 and charged with burglary, criminal trespass, theft by unlawful taking, terroristic threats, and simple assault.

County Prison after being unable to post bail of $75,000.

According to court documents, Middletown Police Detective Gary Rux had requested bail of at least $50,000, noting that Schell is on state parole and has an "extensive violent criminal history" to include aggravated assault, robbery, conspiracy, manufacture of a controlled substance, drug possession, driving under the influence, and fleeing from police.

Hershey man charged with DUI

Middletown police charged a Hershey man with DUI in the 300 block of North Union Street at about 1 a.m. Sunday, July 16.

Ro Thaung, 27, of the 1800 block of Lehman Street, had a bloodalcohol content of 0.255 percent at the time of his arrest, according to court papers police filed with District Judge David Judy.

Thaung was charged with DUI, making an improper left turn, and with vehicle operation restrictions. His preliminary hearing is set for Sept. 7 before Judy.

There was no damage to the residence, police said. The incident was reported shortly after midnight Wednesday, Aug. 2.

Check scam reported

Borough police on Aug. 1 were alerted of a scam that police say has become common.

The caller told police that he had been contacted by someone offering him a $6,000 check. The man was told to deposit the check in his own bank account, and then to write another check on his own account to provide a portion of the money back to the caller in return. Police advise anyone who receives this kind of report to take no action, but to instead report the incident to authorities.

In most cases, there are no funds to back up the check that the victim is asked to deposit. Instead, the victim ends up being out the amount of money that he or she pays the perpetrator of the fraud.

Police say it is difficult if not impossible for them to arrest the people behind these scams, as they are often out of the area and even outside of the United States.

Cases often end up getting turned over to the U.S. Postal Service, which may have a better chance of bringing the perpetrators to justice. But at least if you don't cooperate, you won't end up becoming a victim, police said. If you have questions or think you have been targeted in such

Lower Swatara, Londonderry receive money for bridge work

More than $1.3 million worth of infrastructure projects will be coming to the Lower Swatara and Londonderry townships.

The Dauphin County Board of Commissioners voted unanimously July 26 to approve $4.3 million worth of improvements in Lower Swatara, Londonderry and Derry Townships. The projects will be financed through loans distributed by the Dauphin County Infrastructure Bank, a program created to offer low-interest loans to municipalities for the purpose of infrastructure projects that wouldn't be completed otherwise.

Lower Swatara is receiving $1,149,000 to repair bridges on Highland Street and Richardson Road near Summit Ridge Drive. Specifically, plans call for installing new, precast, reinforced concrete steel box culvert structures at both locations.

Lower Swatara Township engineer Erin Letavic said it would take some time before the township actually receives the money, with her likening the process to obtaining a mortgage for a house, so it could be a couple of months until action begins.

The schedule calls for a total of 78 weeks to be spent on the project, but Letavic said some portions of the schedule could overlap, which would reduce the total amount of time spent on these bridges. Londonderry will receive $165,000 to replace the Swatara Creek Road bridge. Similar to Lower Swatara Township, Londonderry officials will install a new concrete box culvert structure. The projected cost for the Londonderry project is $370,000, with the remaining $265,000 coming in through gaming grants. This comes on the heels of other bridge projects in the township. These projects include bridge lendale, and Beagle roads. All the aforementioned bridges were examined in 2009 and determined which ones needed the most attention first. "This was the next bridge on our list to be repaired," township manager Steve Letavic said. Examining the township's bridges and ranking them was a way of being proactive, rather than reactive, should an unforeseen circumstance arise, according to Letavic.

"It's nice to be a part of something when you're planning ahead," Letavic said.

Letavic did not have a specific start or end date for the project, but he estimated it would be completed next summer.

Vaccinations rules change for schools

The Pennsylvania Department of Health has revised Pennsylvania's school immunization requirements for the 2017-18 school year. The new rules require parents to get their children fully immunized prior to the fifth day of school or the students will be excluded from school. Previously, parents had eight months to meet school immunization requirements. If a student is in the middle of an immunization series and it is too soon for the next dose, the parents must provide the school nurse with a written plan, signed by their health care provider, within the first five days of school. For more information, contact a health care provider, visit www.health.pa.gov or call 877-PA-

More than 200 attend concealed carry program

By Phyllis Zimmerman Special to the Press & Journal

HUMMELSTOWN—Acrowdof more than 200 filled the Hummelstown Chemical Fire Company No. 1 town hall on Aug. 3 to learn more about Pennsylvania's concealed carry regulations for firearms.

The three-hour program was hosted by state Rep. Thomas Mehaffie, R-Lower Swatara Township, who represents the 106th House District.

Speakers included Matt Menges, an attorney at Trinity Law firm of York who also serves as Dover Township supervisor in York County, and Derry Township Police Officer Anthony Clements.

Mehaffie said the yearly program is a continuation of an initiative that was begun by former state Rep. John Payne, his predecessor in the 106th District.

"I think everyone wants to understand what's legal and what's notlegal(regardinggun laws) and if you're doing things correctly," Mehaffie said.

Few in the mostly over-40 crowd appeared unfamiliar with firearms, however. When Menges asked gun owners in the crowd to Karl Spohn of Middletown, a registered gun owner, said he's already attended a number of similar presentations. "You can't get enough information about this.

it," he stated.

William Blace of Camp Hill, also a registered gun owner, said he was there just to learn more about the laws and regulations for carrying firearms. "Ilearned a lot. This was excellent," Blace said.

Nancy Roeting of Hummelstown came to last week's session "to be more informed," even though she doesn't own any firearms. She was around guns when growing up on a farm in South Hanover Township, however, because her family hunted at that time. Menges said he's given countless number of talks throughout central Pennsylvania about the gun laws over the past five years.

"I stopped counting how many of these I've done when I got to 100," he said. The main thing he's seen people worry about, he said, is change.

"For a while people were worried about the 'knock-out game' when that was going around a couple of years ago," Menges, said, referring to a deadly so-called game that involves assaulting others without warning. ""Now people are more worried about civil unrest like riots and protests.'

Menges' address covered such topics as firearms that require a license, how to obtain a license, license exceptions, carrying on school and government property, which U.S. states recognize Pennsylvania permits, and much more. Menges and Clements also offered practical advice to constituents.

"If you hear a noise downstairs in your house, call 911 and wait in the corner with your gun. Don't go wandering around your house in the dark with a gun," Clements advised. "Stay in a safe place. When you first wake up, you have in effect the same awareness as a 0.1 alcohol level."

Menges suggested keeping an inexpensive cellphone in your home's safe area because intruderstend to cut landline wires. Also, he noted, it is legal to travel with your registered gun through U.S. states that don't recognize Pennsylvania licenses while en route

However, it is illegal to stay overnight in states that don't recognize Pennsylvania licenses without further provisions.

INTERIM: Lynch says he isn't sure if job will be a good fit long-term manager since 2012, and also have not filled the position of public safety director.

Interest at a young age

Lynch was attracted to local government after seeing his father, Jack, run for Harrisburg mayor in 1967, losing to Al Straub. His father later was a member of the Susquehanna Township board

A rat bite led Lynch's father to run for Harrisburg mayor, as Lynch's younger brother suffered the injury after playing in a garbage-strewn alley because trash was sporadically picked up. Watching and helping his father run political campaigns spawned a love of local government in Lynch.

"I watched him take calls from neighbors about speeding in the neighborhood, barking dogs, that sort of thing, and I loved the passion with which he addressed them," Lynch said of his father's role on the Susquehanna Township board. "Seemingly mundane things like that, he loved it, and I watched that and saw him take so much satisfaction out of that. It was something I grew up around." Lynch worked in various roles for Comcast (and Suburban Cable before that) before retiring in 2015 after six years as vice president of government affairs. His roles included helping customers in 110 municipalities.

Lynch said he also wanted to help his neighbors out, so he received permission from his bosses at Comcast to run for a vacancy on the Susquehanna Township board of commissioners in 2001.

"I enjoy local government, I love its issues and challenges. I've always liked helping out my neighbors however I could, but I really enjoy trying to make government work better for people and that's what drove me," Lynch said.

Lynch's other positions over the years include working at the Patriot-News in Harrisburg from 1979 to 1987, deputy press secretary to Gov. Robert P. Casey in 1990 and 1991, and working in various press secretary roles for the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry from 1987 to 1995.

Getting started right away

While he doesn't officially begin until Monday, Lynch has already been ingratiating himself to his coworkers and residents, as he has already moved into his new office, met the department heads, and is getting a jump on the paperwork and other information pertinent to his role.

"I'm not approaching this as an interim thing in the sense that I'm just being a placeholder. I am an interim, but you can't approach it with that mindset. I take a lot of pride in what I do for Susquehanna Township and I'm happy to apply that same pride and determination to Lower Swatara Township,' Lynch said.

A combination of factors led Lynch to apply for the position. He was available, he had a love of local government and "I really love the chance to make a difference wherever I am in whatever job I've ever held," he said.

"I've been involved in every aspect of municipal government; budget, administration, personnel, highways, and I'm also an appointed member of the township authority, which runs the wastewater collection system," Lynch said. "I have a lot of local government experience in a first-class township just like Lower Swatara is. I know how to get things done, I know the processes, and as the board conducts its search for a permanent manager, I'm happy to lend my talents on the interim basis on which I was appointed. I think I bring a certain amount of background experience. I've been around local government, I've dealt with people, I've managed teams throughout my career. As a commissioner myself in another township, I think I have a unique perspective on that mix of political will and government governance with actually implementing that political vision that comes from a board of commissioners. It just seemed like a good fit for me." Lynch said he heard about the vacancy from Gary Myers, the former Susquehanna Township manager and current executive director of the Capitol Region Council of Government. Lynch met with board members on Monday, July 24, and the board offered him the position on July 25.

Permanent position?

Lynch said it is too soon to say if he would drop the interim label if the board asked him to take the role full-time, but he knows of the recent history with the position.

"I am very much aware of the need for some continuity and I just want to do whatever I can to keep the trains running around here," he said

He's looking forward the most to being able to make a difference. "I'm looking forward to leading a team that will carry out the wishes of the commissioners which is to provide a continued great place, a great community to live and

Board president has 'good feeling'

There was no discussion by the board during the meeting prior to the approval of hiring Lynch. Board President Jon Wilt said he needed a motion to approve the hiring of Lynch if the board was comfortable with what had been negotiated prior to Wednesday.

The motion was made by Commissioner Todd Truntz and seconded by Commissioner Michael Davies. There was no discussion about hiring Lynch full-time.

However, Wilt told the Press & Journal on the afternoon of Aug. 3 that the board would not have selected Lynch for the position if members didn't think he could handle the responsibility. He called Lynch a good fit for the township because he is a commissioner for another township and understands the issues that face any local government. 'We think he's a worthy person for what we need. We all have a good feeling about this guy," Wilt said.

NIGHT: Young and old get to explore firetrucks, other equipment

Menear.

Fire Chief John Weikle of the Lower Swatara Fire Department echoed Menear's belief that the event was a chance for both sides to meet and get to know one another in a pleasant environment rather than the normal circumstances that force residents and first responders to meet.

"It's nice to talk to people and not be in that stressful situation," Weikle said.

He added that the question most askedduring National Night Out is what the wood stored inside one of the trucks on display was used for. The answer is the wood is used to help levitate an overturned vehicle and keep it from falling on a victim.

Rebecca Clarkson and her two children Regan, 5, and Rowyn, 6, elected to go through the mock fire evacuation activity, put on by Lower Swatara. Regan wasn't a big fan of the faux smoke used in the simulation, but she did learn one important rule when it comes to evacuating a home or building: "Drop on the floor when there's smoke," Regan said.

Faith Frady and her daughter Destiny Tetzloff were with their friends Katie Hoffer and Katelyn Rogers, and Rogers' two daughters Lily and Harper.

The girls had explored a firetruck and police car, jumped around in one of the bounce houses, met a police K-9, and had their fingerprints taken, but both Lily and Destiny said their favorite activity of the evening had been the pony rides.

All three women were in support of the event and the opportunities it offered to support the first responders and bring the community together.

"There's a lot of interaction with people you wouldn't normally interact with," Rogers said, adding that if it would be possible, maybe the event could be held once a season during the year, up to four times a year.

"It would be cool if they did it more often," Frady said.

Council also promoted to sergeant two current Middletown Police Department patrol officers, Scott Yoder and Dennis Morris. Council approved making Tyler Zehring a full-time permanent patrol officer, following Zehring having successfully completed a one-year probation.

The votes for Yoder and Zehring were unanimous. McGlone abstained on the vote promoting Morris to sergeant.

Suglia said the borough looked at salaries being paid to chiefs by other area municipalities.

"We came to the conclusion that this would be a fair salary for both the borough and the chief," Suglia said.

Searching for stability

Including Mouchette, the borough has had six acting, interim or "permanent" police chiefs since February 2012, when Keith Reismiller resigned after a 15-year stint as top cop.

Bey served in the post for two years and almost three months — a relatively lengthy stint compared to the track record since Reismiller's departure. "We are tired of the revolving door of the chief of police here in Middletown," Suglia said. "Chief Mouchette has proved himself a worthy candidate who is perfectly capable of doing the job. All of us here in Middletown put our trust in him, and we feel good about our decision and the salary that we offered him." Curry has made no secret of his preference for making Mouchette permanent chief, and the mayor repeated those sentiments following the council meeting.

"I'm excited to have somebody who I think is extremely dedicated to our community. I think in a verv short time frame (Mouchette) has really earned the trust of the public," Curry said. "He shares the exact same ideas I have with regards to community policing. We got exactly what we needed. I have the utmost faith in his ability to keep this department moving in the direction that it is."

The $96,000 salary may come as "sticker shock" to some residents, the mayor acknowledged, but the borough was paying Reismiller $97,448 back in January 2012.

"Paying Chief Mouchette $96,000 is reasonable, it's fair, it's what a man of his talent deserves," Curry said. "You were paying somebody that years ago. The cost of living goes up, the price of talent goes up, I'm fully comfortable giving him that salary. You get what you pay for, or you lose what you don't pay for."

Running the department

Mouchette thanked council "for confirming me," and expressed gratitude to Curry.

"He has advocated for me," Mouchette said of the mayor. The new chief also wants the public to know that "the feeling is mutual" when it comes to the mayor's comments about having a good working relationship.

He went on to do a little advocating of his own, saying that while he's heard some people say that Curry is too hands off when it comes to the department, "I feel like we have the right amount of connection.'

"It's my job to run the department. His job is to know the vision of what the community wants the department to be, and to relay that vision to me. He doesn't micromanage me."

Picking sergeants

Yoder and Morris were among three full-time officers who scored high enough in written and oral exams to be certified as eligible to be promoted to sergeant by the borough civil service commission.

ficer who was eligible, Patrolman James Bennett, scored higher than Morris. Yoder scored the highest of the three.

Council's decision to promote Yoder and Morris to the two sergeant positions currently available was based upon the recommendations of Mouchette and Curry, Suglia said.

Bennett, a Middletown police officer since 2006, had been a sergeant and was acting chief in 2014 from when Steven Wheeler resigned as chief in April until Bey took over in October.

Bennett was suspended and demoted to patrolman after being charged with summary disorderly conduct and public drunkenness during an off-duty party in the borough on Dec. 24, 2015.

Bennett successfully completed ARD in Dauphin County Court and returned to duty in 2016.

Morris started with the department in 2000. Borough council fired him in 2014, but in May 2015 an arbitrator ruled that the borough had no grounds to fire Morris.

According to court documents, the borough fired Morris for neglector violation of an official duty, inefficiency, neglect, disobedience of orders and conduct unbecoming an officer.

Morris alleged in the federal lawsuit that his firing was retribution for his reporting to the Dauphin County District Attorney and state Attorney General that former Chief Steven Wheeler was not certified as a police officer and therefore "did not have any law enforcement authority under Pennsylvania law," according to the lawsuit. As such, council's hiring of Wheeler "violated the Borough Code and other state law," according to Morris's lawsuit. Council voted to reinstate Morris to the force in November 2015, after a Dauphin County judge tossed aside a borough petition to set aside the arbitrator's decision.

Besides back pay, Morris was awarded an additional $52,000 by the borough to settle a federal lawsuit that Morris had brought against the borough regarding his firing in 2014.

Following council's action promoting Yoder and Morris to sergeant, Curry praised Morris as "a workhorse."

"That's the type of person that we want overseeing everybody else on the force, so I'm excited to have him as sergeant," Curry said of Morris.

Yoder was hired by MPD in 1998. Curry said he has been "quite impressed" with his development since Curry became mayor in 2014.

"He is going to make an excellent sergeant, and this is the type of opportunity that he needed and deserves. I have the utmost faith that he will do an excellent job,' Curry said.

Need for sergeants

Promoting officers to sergeants is something that both Bev and Mouchette have long said is needed to bring supervision and accountability to the department, the mayor noted.

Yoder, already the department armorer, will be placed in charge of logistics; which will also include responsibility for supply and for maintaining department vehicles and bicycles.

Morris will head operations, which will include patrol functions, the investigative arm of patrol, and the department's computer systems.

Each sergeant will also have two shift supervisors, meaning that every single shift will have a supervisor present at all times, Mouchette has said.

This is the third time that the borough has had to replace the electric meters at Woodlayne Court due to flooding, Wilsbach

The first two times the borough replaced the meters at the borough's own expense.

Residents of Woodlayne Court were allowed to move back in July 27, after being evacuated July 23 due to flooding that submerged electrical equipment in the basement of the apartment complex at Wood and Wilson streets in Middletown.

for what it cost the borough to replace the meters at Woodlayne Court this time.

The borough is putting Woodlayne Court "on notice" that a solution needs to be found to prevent the electrical equipment from being flooded out again, Wilsbach added. "Luck is not on our side" with the way it keeps raining.

Heffelfinger said that Middletown police and firefighters knocked on the door of her apartment at about 11:15 p.m. on July 23 and told her that she had until midnight to get out.

She took her cat, and that was about it. She didn't take any of the food that she had in her freezer and refrigerator.

Residents were allowed back into their apartments the next day to retrieve anything they wanted to take out, but Heffelfinger said she wasn't able to salvage any of the perishable food.

But "the only thing we all lost was our food," because none of the apartments themselves were flooded, Heffelfinger said.

She has renter's insurance, but the loss was less than her $500 deductible, so she didn't file a claim.

Most of the residents who live moved back in, Heffelfinger said. A number of the apartments are leased to Penn State Harrisburg students who usually aren't here most of the summer, she added. Also, two disabled residents on in Woodlayne Court all year have the second floor had not moved back in because the elevator is not working. As a result Heffelfinger and the other residents can't use the washers and dryers, because the only access to them is via the elevator. So for the time being, Heffelfinger is making due going to a laundromat.

She said Woodlayne Court has done the best it can in dealing with the situation.

Restoration companies and repair people were at the complex in force the morning after the flooding on July 23, and she feels that workers have been trying to get the building back on line as quickly as possible.

Don't see red over yellow curbs: borough marks no-parking spots

By Dan Miller

danmiller@pressandiournal.com

If you find a ticket on your windshield for illegal parking along one of Middletown's main streets, you can no longer blame it on not being able to see the yellow paint on the curb.

Borough public works employees have spent much of the summer redoing yellow paint on curbing through much of the town.

This is the first time since 2013 or even 2012 that the borough has made a systematic effort to repaint the curbing, said Public Works Director Greg Wilsbach.

It couldn't be done since then because the borough didn't have enough staff. Wilsbach was able to remedy that by getting council to approve two seasonal workers to augment public works for the summer.

Besides painting the curbing, public works this summer has spentalot of time spraying weeds, sprucing up downtown, and trying to catch up on some overdue park maintenance.

The yellow curb painting started on the most visible and highly traveled streets, such as Main and Union, Wilsbach said.

The borough has worked hard to try and get all the curbing repainted, but that is not going to be possible this year, Wilsbach said.

Even with the seasonal help, public works is stretched thin because Wilsbach is trying to bring back services that had been reduced or eliminated in recent years, such as street sweeping.

"That takes one person away for two weeks out of the month just to sweep. They didn't have that for years," Wilsbach said.

Also, the start of school is fast approaching so public works has to make sure all the crosswalks are up to par.

Wilsbach hopes to do the rest of the yellow curbing next year, but that will largely depend on whether council approves more seasonal help in the 2018 budget.

Adam Erdman, standing, a seasonal worker with Middletown Public Works, assists fellow Public Works employee Kari Keller as she applies a fresh coat of yellow paint to the curbing of a street in downtown Middletown.

Pipeline work continues despite steps taken to stop it

Trench construction takes place on the Sunoco Logistics Pipeline between Oberlin Road and North Union Street on the afternoon of Thursday, July 27. Recent court action doesn't directly affect the work being done locally, as no horizontal drilling is being done here.

Progress continues to be made on the Sunoco Logistics Pipeline in Lower Swatara Township.

Work was being completed in late July in the area in between Oberlin Road and North Union Street. The work that was being completed is known as trench construction.

According to Jeff Shields, communications manager for Sunoco Logistics, trench construction is where pipe is laid out and welded next to the trench before it is lowered into the trench and backfilled with dirt.

Trench construction is one of three types of construction taking place with the Sunoco Logistics Pipeline. The other two are road boring and horizontal directional drilling.

Tuesday, Aug. 8, Shields said the hearing was postponed from Monday, Aug. 7 to Wednesday Aug. 9 and is supposed to last three days.

Because the work taking place in Lower Swatara Township does not involve horizontal drilling, the progress was able to continue locally.

Shields added that crews will continue to do traditional trench construction and road boring throughout the county.

Competition has been the theme so far for the Middletown Area High School football squad as the 2017 season.

That mantra is a good one to have as Middletown will need to compete all year if they hope to come close to last year's results.

Everyone around the program is aware of how good the Blue Raiders were last year, with a perfect regular season, a District Myers' mindset of competing 3 title, and a runner-up finish in because the word was brought up the state play-14-1. They were the first MAHS football team to advance to the state championship game.

But that was then with a differ-

Nearly two dozen seniors graduated in 2017, including running back Jaelen Thompson, quarterback Chase Snavely, and receiver Laron Woody. However, Middletown does have some members of last year's team returning, including running back Brady Fox. None of that seems to faze head coach Brett Myers, who is returning for his fifth season.

"Our spring workouts have gone well. Guys are competing. Everybody's doing a really nice job and trying to improve every day," Myers said.

The team had more than 50 students try out during the spring. The challenges the team faces are the same as any other year, which players and coaches prepare for are replacing graduated seniors, developing leaders, and creating chemistry and a culture that will lead to success, he said.

> "Our guys are really working hard at doing that and it'll take a little time and we'll eventually, hopefully, get there," Myers said.

The players have bought into again and again offs, finishing "We're not looking in the by players at dia day on Friday, July 28.

"There's a windshield seeing where lot of competition within the team," senior Tre Leach said, adding that so far practices have been up-tempo because everyone is working hard and no one wants to get replaced by someone else, no matter what their position or experience.

Senior running back/middle linebacker Brady Fox echoed Leach's observations on the difficulty of establishing a pecking order within the depth chart.

"There are a lot of kids pushing each other. The younger kids love pushing us," Fox said.

There is so much competition that Leach has only determined which position he'll be playing on one side of the ball. He already knows he'll be playing free safety on defense. He has yet to establish a position on offense. He's Varsity football schedule, 2017

"It was easier than I thought it would be," Leach said of trying different positions. "As long as I can help the team, that's all that matters.'

Leach added if players know the plays, they can be successful in any role coaches ask them to be in and if the players give all their effort for each individual game they would "put ourselves in a good position to win."

Middletown has the unenviable task of replacing two-year starter Chase Snavely at quarterback.

Spiky shoes valued at almost $1,000 stolen from porch in Lower Swatara

A pair of designer brand shoes valued at close to $1,000 was reported stolen from a township residence in the 2000 block of Market Street Extended.

Police report the new pair of Christian Louboutin sneakers had been delivered by FedEx to the front porch of the townhome at approximately 1:30 p.m. July 28 but then was stolen.

The resident told police the red and black sneakers are adorned with spikes and cost $945. The sneakers were purchased as a gift, the resident said.

Police said the resident claims the package should not have been delivered without a signature but reportedly FedEx is noted to have stated a signature option was not part of the delivery.

Woman charged after crash

Sarah E. Vogel, 32, of the 500 block of South Union Street, Middletown, has been charged following an investigation of a crash in which Vogel's car struck the front porch of a township home, police report.

Vogel was taken to the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center but reportedly did not suffer any serious injuries from the accident. Her 2008 Volkswagen Jetta sustained extensive damage and was towed from the scene. Police did not specify details about damage to the home.

Woman who took young son to drug deal gets probation

A Highspire woman will serve probation after being accused of taking her 5-year-old son to a drug deal in Harrisburg.

Kelly Ann Cokosky, 26 of Highspire, recently was sentenced by Judge Scott Arthur Evans to two years of probation after pleading guilty to endangering the welfare of a child and drug paraphernalia charges.

On March 26, 2016, according to authorities, Cokosky was a passenger in a vehicle that was stopped for a traffic violation around midnight in the 1800 block of Market Street in Harrisburg.

When officers approached the vehicle, they observed Cokosky, who appeared to be under the heroin, police say.

Cokosky was one of four adults in the vehicle. Cokosky was found in possession of a heroin use kit

— syringes, empty packets, spoon and water. Her 5-year-old son was in a car seat in the back seat.

Based on her recent use of heroin, possession of paraphernalia and time of night, she was charged with endangering the welfare of the 5-year-old, according to authorities.

RAIDERS: Coach Myers looking ahead with new players, not back

Snavely, who has moved on to Lock Haven University, completed 60 percent of his passes last year, throwing for 2,243 yards and 25 touchdowns, while running for another seven. So far, Myers has had different players in the quarterback position.

"I'm not really concerned about it because guys'll compete and in the end the best player will play,"

As central as the quarterback position is, it will be tough to replace Thompson. All he did last year was rush for 1,605 yards, and 19 touchdowns, while adding 317 yards and four touchdowns on nine catches.

In his career, Thompson broke the school rushing mark, totaling 3,940 yards to top the 3,409 yards by Rodney Ramsey, whose last season was in 2008. He was one of five finalists for the Small School 2016 Mr. PA Football. He will play collegiately at Towson University in Maryland.

nine passes for 123 yards and one touchdown, despite sharing the load with Thompson.

In fact, with more than 2,700 rushing yards in his career already, a standout 2017 season will make him the No. 1 rusher in Blue Raiders history.

"The fact that Jaelen's not here, it's going to be different for him a little bit because they were so close and they relied on each other, on and off the field. In the end it doesn't really change how he looks at what we're doing," Myers said. Last year's success might have had an unforeseen positive impact on this year's season, given the amount of practice time.

'We got a lot of experience. We got kids that played 15 games last year. Compared to most people in the state, that's a year and a half. If you even look at our JV players, they practiced an extra half a season last year so while I definitely there. Our guys are going to embrace that and take those on," Myers said.

Myers said he knows his 2017 squad will face yearlong comparisons to the 2016 team, especially if the team gets off to a hot start.

But as wide receiver Tyreer Mills puts it, "we've got to work on what we've got to do this year," instead of basking in last year's success.

"There's two different ways we look at it. As a program, that's a nice thing, but this year's team is a different team. In the end, it's two different groups," Myers said. "Every team has its own identity and this team has yet to find their identity and that'll start with our first game. That's what we're focused about. We're not looking in the rearview mirror, we're looking through the windshield seeing where we're headed.'

Rich Nigerian princes? Scams are way past that

Scams are hardly new. From Ponzi schemes to fake charities to selling the Brooklyn Bridge to unsuspecting visitors to New York, people have been bilked for centu-

As technology improves, so have the scammers.

The days of receiving an email from a Nigerian prince who is sitting on a fortune are long since gone. Scams are high-tech.

It's happening locally, and sometimes they are successful. Just look at the recent editions of the Press & Journal.

· Lower Swatara police said a concerned grandmother fell victim to a plea to send money to pay for an attorney to defend her grandson in ultimately what was a false story. Her "grandson" called her and told her he had been in a car accident while in upstate New York and he needed her help. Reportedly the victim sent $860 in an electronic transfer via two Walmart stores. Police told the victim that there was little they could do in the case.

 Someone apparently hacked the computer of a Lower Swatara Township man, stole compromising photographs, then threatened to post them on the resident's Facebook page unless he paid $1,000. Police said the man sent $500 via Western Union and another $500 via Moneygram to an address in Tondo. a district of Manila in the Philippines. The scammer appeared to have gained access when the resident clicked on a link in a phishing email. This installed a Trojan horse that allowed his hard drive to be copied. Phishing is when a scammer uses fraudulent emails or texts, or copycat websites to get you to share valuable personal information. A Trojan horse is a program designed to secretly breach the security of a computer.

• Middletown police on Aug. 1 were alerted of a scam that police say has become common. The caller told police that he had been contacted by someone offering him a $6,000 check. The man was told to deposit the check in his own bank account, and then to write another check on his own account to provide a portion of the money back to the caller in return. In most cases, there are no funds to back up the check that the victim is asked to deposit.

· A Lower Swatara Township resident told police an attempt was made to defraud him out of more than $7,000 on allegations he has not paid his federal taxes. The resident received a telephone call at noon March 15 from a person identifying herself as Sarah Morris of the IRS stating the resident owed $7,521 for unpaid taxes from 2011 to 2015. The caller asked the resident how he would like to move forward to pay the taxes. Police reported the township resident said he would not move forward with any payment after which he hung up on the caller.

We could go on and on.

Many involve technology. Many involve taking advantage of someone who doesn't know better (a grandma) or doesn't want to be embarrassed (blackmail by taking personal information).

The price we pay for the wonders of the Internet and email is that our personal information is more available than ever. Thieves don't have to enter a locked office to get data. They just have to be able to nimbly access your computer.

They won't stop, because they work. The perpetrators are hard to find, any money lost likely will never be recovered, and even if the scammer is found, prosecution is

"There are so many computer scams out there that grow and evolve daily," Frank Williamson, who was then the Lower Swatara Township manager and acting public safety director, told the Press & Journal for a story about the man scammed over the personal pic-

We can't give you a tip for every possible scam. But make sure you have the latest anti-virus software. The price we pay for the wonders of the Internet and email is that our personal information is more available than ever. Thieves don't have to enter a locked office to get data. They just have to be able to nimbly access your computer.

Make sure you know the source of emails before opening them or a link embedded in them. Check the email address of the sender.

"Many times the email address will be spoofed to look like it is from someone you know," Williamson

Be suspicious of money being deposited into your account, and someone then requesting that you purchase other items or withdraw a portion of the money.

Make sure that a "business" calling you with problems with your account or service is legit.

Don't try to get rich quick. That is a basic of avoiding scams that hasn't changed for centuries.

And don't be afraid to contact authorities. While that scam might only take you for a couple of hundred dollars, who wants to go through life knowing they fell for it?

Feds don't know best when regarding property rights

Asset forfeitures are civil proceedings that allow law enforcement to take possession of the property of certain persons suspected of crime.

Drug arrests are the most common examples of seizures: cash, cars, and sometimes homes. Law enforcement can seize personal property from citizens based only on the suspicion the property has been involved in criminal activity — without ever having to charge the owner with a crime.

Over time, forfeitures expanded. Once used to take profits from convicted criminals and deter them from benefitting from their illegal actions, forfeiture was sometimes used to take ownership of properties from innocent citizens. Cash, cars, real estate, and even personal property was taken from people who faced no criminal charges. In Philadelphia alone, onethird of those who had had their property forfeited were not convicted

I was pleased to work with Senate President Pro Tempore Joe Scarnati to spearhead changes in Pennsylvania law to better protect property rights — now Act 13 of 2017. Since then, U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions has announced federal changes to expand the scope of forfeitures.

I have concerns with these policy changes as I believe they're contrary to state laws and states' rights.

Opponents of our efforts in Pennsylvania are now bemoaning Sessions' proposals for property forfeitures while previously saying Pennsylvania's reforms wouldn't go far enough. Compare one op-ed about Pennsylvania's changes, titled, "To Think that SB 8 Becoming Law will Effectively Reform Civil Asset Forfeiture is Naïve," with another opinion piece lamenting federal seizures that said: "Jeff Sessions Is Aiding and Abetting Police Departments Who Want to Seize Property of People Convicted of No Crime."

Fortunately, Scarnati and I were able to overcome those who said our proposed reforms weren't good enough. Our opponents were, in essence, protecting the status quo. We're especially thankful for the help and support from the U.S. Justice Action Network, a national organization working to curb civil asset forfeiture abuses, and the Pennsylvania District Attorneys' Association.

For over two years, we worked to bring needed reforms to Pennsylvania law. The key was finding a proper balance between the uses of forfeiture against criminals with the property rights of innocent citizens who should not have their property taken by the government.

We also worked to include language in our legislation to maintain protections that prohibit state agencies from referring Pennsylvania property to the federal government and allowing forfeitures under the revised federal policies.

In addition to Pennsylvania's new law protecting against federal overreach, it also:

 Creates a higher burden of proof for forfeiture and protects third-party owners by placing additional requirements on government agencies.

 Increases transparency in the auditing and reporting of forfeited

• Prohibits any pre-forfeiture seizures without due process (i.e., a hearing).

· Establishes an extra level of protection for anyone acquitted of a related crime who is trying to get their proper-

Without these protections, Pennsylvanians would have continued to face a complex civil court system, without the aid of an attorney, and would have continued to be forced to try to prove their property innocent against governmental power.

Now, if we could just get the federal government to adhere to the 10th Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.'

I simply do not believe the federal government knows best — especially when it comes to property rights.

President Trump's obsession with loyalty is horrible for the country

Thank the Almighty that there are still a few good men and women who are loyal to the Constitution.

Loyalty is serious. It is a commitment to a person, a cause or an idea even when it contradicts our self-interest.

The military and civilian first responders recognize that loyalty to a squad or team can even include "that last full measure of devotion." The military in particular stands ready to go in harm's way to protect the nation. Aside from those few, loyalty is in short supply in our

The word loyalty itself is strange. It does not appear in the oath of allegiance that new citizens take or in the oaths that people must swear to when they are elected or appointed to office.

Sen. Joe McCarthy made the idea of the "loyalty oath" notorious, so we shy away from it. We really didn't hear the word again until Donald Trump came along. Trump "needs and expects' loyalty, he told former Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey. Comey promised honesty.

Real gangsters and gangsta rappers, even at the HUAC hearings in October 1947, preferred the word allegiance.

The CEO of a family firm, like a medieval monarch, can demand absolute loyalty to the firm/family. That is the case with The Trump Organization. That has not been the case in government.

President Donald Trump thinks he is still running a family firm. He has assured us that he is not. He demands the highest level of loyalty from all of his subordinates. Employees are expected to be loyal — that is, ready to suffer for the firm/ family. Ivanka and Jared Kushner don't seem to understand that the Hatch Act restricts the personal and political activity of government employees, especially if they are members of the family. Thus, Comey could not promise loyalty to president Trump, only honesty. His loyalty, in regard to governmental activities, was committed to the U.S. Constitution.

Trump is not a Republican — or anything else I can think of. There is nothing like a set of core values that the people around him could be loyal to and be willing to sacrifice for. Their loyalty is owed to Trump himself, the man who gave them and controls their job. But the military is steeped in all accoutrements of loyalty. It is serious for them and Trump might not realize that he is staffing his most important positions with the military.

It is rumored that Gens. James Mattis and John Kelly, sometime in January, agreed that they would be certain that they never leave the president alone in the country. One of them would always be stateside. While that hints at insurrection it also references the kind of loyalty that motivated the Founding Fathers.

Our bought-and-paid for Congress certainly has no loyalty to anything other than their own pay and perks.

The election of Trump himself was a political insurrection. The people see the objects of their loyalty being trampled on. Their loyalty is spurring them to action, not to anything about our president.

Then there was the comedic moment, where Scaramouch, the classic clown of commedia dell'arte, gets put upon for his boasting and cowardice. Enter Anthony Scaramucci, recently White House communications director, who seems scripted for the part. He thought for a moment that he was part of the family. He wasn't. Playing the part assigned him, he loses a fortune, a wife, the birth of his son, his job and his pride.

Kelly was appointed White House Chief of Staff to try to bring some order and coherence to the West Wing. Having spent 45 years in the military, he knows how to keep control. So the first thing he did was call Jeff Sessions, the attorney general, and tell him his job was safe despite the personal and professional attacks on him by the president.

Sessions, when he recused himself from the Russian investigation, endangered his own position in order to be loyal to the Constitution and the law of the land. While I oppose practically everything Jeff Sessions is doing, I have to recognize his right to do it. In this case he is doing the right thing.

Donald Trump is who he is and he is not going to change. I see no reason to believe that he will shift his loyalties to the Constitution and rule of law. Rather, I see him engrossed in the pettiest personal problems, concentrated on winning not on content and obsessed with the Russian investigation. I fear that one too many tweets and one too many fired lawyers will undercut whatever John Kelly might accomplish.

Refused to open council meeting at Royalton

Borough Council was not held Tuesday evening due entirely to the refusal of Guy S. Vogt, president, to open the meeting with nine representative taxpayers sitting at the council table, each one eager to serve as a councilman from his respective ward.

Eli K. Metzler Jr., the court appointee with his associates, LeRoy Kohr, George T. Boyer and President Vogt were present. Likewise John T. Sides and his associates, Ralph Kohr, William Miller, Roy Daugherty and John Snavely were at the table.

Solicitor H.O. Schaeffer was asked for an opinion concerning Monday, Aug. 27.

The meeting of the Royalton the matter, in order that a meeting could be called. He stated that in his opinion, Sides had just as much right to serve as a councilman, irrespective of the fact that he was elected by only four members and without a presiding officer in the chair, as Metzler, having a court appointment and also a court order.

> President Vogt flatly refused to open the meeting and have a roll call, with nine men answering to the call. It was suggested that both Sides and Metzler retire, and go ahead with the meeting until after a court decision, scheduled to be heard on

Famous Lancaster Turnpike reproduced at Ford exhibit at the World's Fair, Chicago

When Pennsylvanians visit a Century of Progress in Chicago this summer, they will find one exhibit there which should have for them a special and personal interest.

In size, it is insignificant compared with the buildings and vistas which surround it. But historically and sentimentally, it is of the utmost significance for Pennsylvanians.

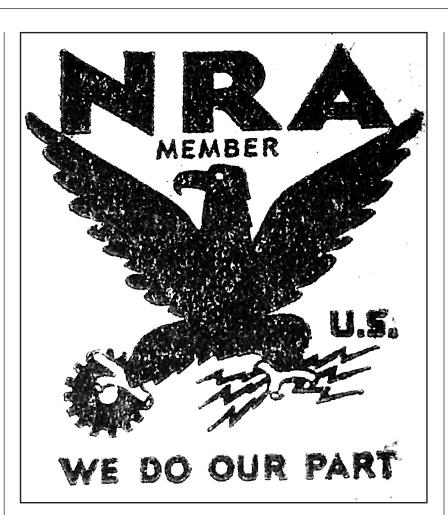

It is the reproduction of the famous Lancaster Pike between Philadelphia and Lancaster. The reproduction is one of 21 replicas of famous roads of history which comprise "The Roads of the World," a 2,000-foot oval roadway in Ford Gardens.

Lost money returned

While Mrs. Sara Gates, of town, stopped on Union Street, to talk to William Lemon, she dropped $16 in bills on the running board of Mr. Lemon's automobile. She did not miss the money until sometime afterward. The roll of bills was found by an Imbrognio boy and it was given to Mr. Lemon, who returned it to Mrs. Gates after an identification of the denomination of the bills.

Why is there an eagle on Page 1? It has nothing to do with rifles

EDITOR'S NOTE: This logo appeared on both sides of the masthead on the front page of the Middletown Journal on Saturday, Aug. 11, 1934. When you see the initials NRA today, you probably think "National Rifle Association." But in 1934, the country was still coming out of The Great Depression, and President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's New Deal policies were still in place.

The NRA stands for National Recovery Administration. The act that established it "sanctioned, supported, and in some cases, enforced an alliance of industries. Antitrust laws were suspended," according to ourdocuments.gov.

It was ruled unconstitutional in May 1935. However, while it was in effect starting in 1933, companies that complied with the act displayed this symbol. It would appear as a blue eagle with red type around it in color publications, but of course the Journal didn't have the capability of printing in color in 1933.

One other note of interest: This eagle logo is what prompted the Philadelphia Eagles football team to take its name. The team was founded in 1933, and the name was used to honor the symbol by owners Bert Bell and Lud Wray.

Husband asks damages from parents-in-law

Dauphin County Court, at Harrisburg, Wednesday, by Oscar G. Wickersham, counselfor Joseph D'Agostino of Hummelstown, who took legal recourse against his parents-in-law, Frank and Mrs. Ida Stortoni, of Hershey, claiming $25,000 damages for the alleged alienation of the affections of his wife.

Two weeks ago, D'Agostino lost a court action which followed the marital breach in his family when court awarded his wife custody of their two children, Joseph Jr., aged 3 years, and Robert, 20 months.

Mrs. D'Agostino, who filed action to gain custody of the children, charged her husband forced her from his house. The court ordered the children placed in the custody of their mother, who was crippled in an auto accident several months ago, but

An action was filed in the ruledtheymight visit their father two days weekly.

> The D'Agostinos were married June 9, 1930, and, the husband says, lived happily in Hummelstown until July 30 of the same year when, he charges, her parents by "promises, persuasions and entreaties" alienated the affections of his wife.

The Stortonis, the husband claims, by "false statements ... and by various other unlawful means, caused and procured the said Verna D'Agostino to lose her affections ... thereby causing a permanent separation between the plaintiff and his wife."

D'Agostino pleads he is entitled to damages because he has lost the love of his wife and because he has suffered great humiliation. W. Justin Carter, counsel for the Stortonis, is required to file an answer to D'Agostino's action in 15 days.
