Camps, Camps, Camps ...

There Is Something For Kids Of All Ages

Before we know it, the weather will warm up, the sun will shine and kids will have seemingly endless hours at their disposal. That time can be spent in a variety of ways, some good and some bad, so why not encourage the kids to sign up for a summer camp? During summer camps, children and teens can nurture their social skills, build friendships and be introduced to nature. Whether their hobbies involve sports, arts and crafts, or music — or maybe they have yet to discover their next great passion — there are enough camps to offer something for everyone. This guide has all the information you need about the most popular camps in Anne Arundel County. If one of them looks appealing, be sure to visit the camp online to register as soon as possible.

America's Boat School Teaches Kids To Have Fun And Be Safe On The Water

Annapolis School Of Seamanship Offers Junior Captains Program

Give kids the chance to get out on the water and have fun this summer while learning essential boating skills from licensed professionals.

The Annapolis School of Seamanship — known as “America’s Boat School” — is again offering its popular powerboating courses for kids.

“Students will gain the knowledge and confidence to safely operate a small boat by themselves,” said Mark

Talbott, operations manager at the Annapolis School of Seamanship. “They will fulfill the mandatory safe boating requirements required by all states to operate a boat.”

Founded in 2002 by professional mariner and U.S. Coast Guard licensed captain John Martino, the school is located in the perfect setting for nautical learning: right on Back Creek and Mears Marina in the picturesque Maritime Republic of Eastport. The school is considered a leader in the education of professional and recreational boaters, so classes typically fill up months in advance.

The year-round classes are offered on a wide range of nautical topics, including hands-on diesel engine, marine electrical systems, navigation, weather and captain’s license courses.

Just like the adult classes, the kids programs — known as Junior Captains programs — are taught by U.S. Coast Guard-licensed instructors.

“These are my favorite courses that we teach,” Martino said. “This program is considered the best kids’ powerboating course in the country. Kids get to have a blast out on the water, while learning to be safe.”

The Junior Captains course level II teaches the fundamentals of knots and line handling; docking and close quarters maneuvering; how to operate at speed and to safely tow a tube on single outboard inflatables.

Other skills learned while out on the water include rules of the road, aids to navigation, and weather.

Back at the docks, instructors teach safety equipment, pre-departure checks, and how to use VHF radios.

For graduates of Junior Captains course I, the Annapolis School of Seamanship offers a level II course. This course builds on the students’ boating skills and knowledge and covers more in-depth training on rules of the road and navigation. Students learn electronic navigation, using chartplotters to navigate to locations using waypoints and routes.

Unlike other programs out there, lessons aren’t re-

America's Boat School Teaches Kids To Have Fun

stricted to the classroom. "From day one, these kids are hands-on driving the boat," said Captain Matt Benhoff, vice president of the Annapolis School of Seamanship.

To make sure each student gets plenty of wheel time, each course is limited to eight students. The ratio of students to instructors is an impressive four to one.

Each Junior Captains course is a five-day-long, half-day course open to kids ages 11 to 15. Students can choose between morning or afternoon sessions any week from mid-June through August.

Kids leave these courses with more than a great summertime experience. They will have satisfied the education requirements of the National Safe Boating Curriculum, which is mandatory in Maryland for any boat operator born after 1972.

Upon completion of the course, students receive their Maryland Safe Boater card.

Programs at the Annapolis School of Seamanship fill quickly. To register, visit www.annapolischoolof-seamanship.com or call 410-263-8848. ■
